Work Income Tax Slashed; House Group Hits Evaders

Ways and Means Adopts Recommendations by Sec. Morgenthau.

Husband and Wife To File 1 Return

10 Per Cent Deductions on Earnings Under $8,000 Favored.

By Robert C. Albright.

Scaling down the tax rate on earned incomes, and requiring married couples to file joint income tax returns, the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday further modified its $270,000,000 tax revision measure to meet Treasury recommendations.

Changes were ordered at an all-day committee session, following a conference with Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr. Formal action was taken on all but two major proposals for plugging income tax loopholes, devised by a special Ways and Means Subcommittee.

Alterations cut down estimated revenues to between $200,000,000 and $240,000,000.

Decision to permit slight deductions for earned income and to force husbands and wives living together to file one joint return, represented a victory for Secretary Morgenthau, who held out for these changes in two appearances before the committee.

Normal Rate Upheld.

The committee stood steadfastly by subcommittee recommendations for one normal income tax rate of 4 per cent on the first $4,000 of taxable income, however. Beginning at $4,000, new surtax rates beginning at 4 per cent and graduated up to 59 per cent on incomes over $1,000,000, would be levied.

The committee abandoned efforts to curtail deduction and depreciation allowances by 25 per cent, as to eliminate consolidated income tax returns, on advice of Treasury experts.

Instead of eliminating consolidated returns, the committee provided a penalty of 2 per cent for corporations filing this type of return. This compares with the 1 per cent penalty now exacted.

Decision to require husbands and wives to file one joint return followed a sharp fight within the committee, and was approved only by a close vote. Treasury experts estimated it would mean $40,000,000 in new revenues.

Opposition was led by Representative Samuel B. Hill (Democrat), Washington, chairman of the special subcommittee, and repre-

Insull at Sea On Next Stop

Athens, Jan. 25 (AP).—Speculation about Samuel Insull's next refuge when he is deported a week hence included the conjecture today that the 64-year-old former utilities operator may have to spend his remaining years on the ocean as an unwanted man without a country.

Some, in pointing to this possibility, declared the Greek government is firm in its determination not to issue a Greek passport to him and spoke of a likely difficulty in obtaining a visa for a laissez-passer—permission to leave the country.

No other nation has offered him haven, now that the state council and the minister of the interior have agreed that Insull will be given no further extension of his residence permit.

Interior ministry attaches said they did not expect him to use his void American passport. No foreign consulate here has prepared to viza the laissez-passer and without it Insull could not enter another country. Nor was it expected that he would be surrendered to American authorities, who twice have vainly sought his extradition.

The probability was foreseen that if his doctors do not intervene and say he is too ill to travel, Greek police will escort him to the harbor on January 31 and put him aboard a Greek ship sailing at once.

Facing such a dilemma, Insull may try as a last resort a dash to mysterious Abyssinia or faraway Japan.

Mme. Kuyemdjogis, a friend of Insull, told an Associated Press representative, who called to inquire as to the aged man's health, that he was still abed and that he had not yet made another appeal to extend his residence permit.

Boston Girl Feared Held by Mad Killer

Missing Student, 15, Sought 10 Days; Weird Letter Threatens Death to Child, Citing Mysterious Murder in Bakeshop.

Boston, Jan. 25 (AP).—The whereabouts of Lorraine Anita Hewey, 15, remained a mystery tonight as police pressed their search through Boston's South End for a trace of a fiend believed to be holding her captive with intent to slay her.

The mother of the high school student, who had been missing ten days, received a letter today which said:

"I am going to kill your daughter like I killed Ethel Zuckerman because I am crazy. I am 36 years old six feet two blue eyes. I wear a gray suit, blue hat and black shoes and I will kill her soon. I live in the south end of Boston, Mass."

The letter was postmarked in a station in the south end at 1 a. m. today. Police said they were convinced the letter had a definite connection with the case.

The Zuckerman girl, 18, a high school graduate last year, was slain recently in a South End bakeshop, in which she worked, by a person who stabbed her to death and pinioned her to the floor with a knife driven through her neck, while bakers worked on the floor below.

Clews in this case came to dead ends. Police said they were confident the slayer of the Zuckerman girl was a person of abnormal mind, so brutal was the manner in which she was killed, and this belief led to the conviction that in the apprehension of the author of the letter they would solve both cases.

Mrs. Leon N. Hewey, of the Dorchester district of Boston, mother of the missing girl, discounted the possibility her daughter vanished of her own accord. She said the girl left a married sister's home in Norwood on January 15, to return home, but had not been seen since. Police said they had traced the girl from Norwood to the Forest Hills elevated station in Boston.

Police Death Probe Meets Blank Walls

Coroner Withholds Verdict Pending Autopsy in Mystery.

Clapp's service revolver was clutched in his right hand. One shot had been fired, detectives said.

Fifteen hours after finding of the body police had no definite announcement as to the manner of Clapp's death.

A report that Clapp habitually carried sums of money running into thousands of dollars, was being checked. No money was found on the body, police said.

Brother officers at the Eighth Precinct, who would not be quoted, said Clapp owned several houses from which he collected heavy rents. His wife is reported to have informed detectives that he carried the money because of a disbelief in banks.

Police were mystified by numerous angles. Clapp's uniform cap was found in the street some distance from his machine. The car, with ignition off and emergency brake on, was wedged against a tree, sidewise across the curbing.

Residents Hear Crash.

Residents in the vicinity of Indian lane and Glenbrook road were startled just before dawn by a shot and what sounded like an automobile collision. Clapp's machine hit several parked cars before striking the tree.

Skid marks on the street indicated, police said, the car careened out of control for approximately 40 feet. The tree is on a curve at the bottom of a steep hill.

The section, known as Spring Valley, is sparsely settled. The nearest residence is that of Theodore Joslin, secretary to former President Hoover. He told police he was awakened about 5:30 a. m. by the crash.

Carl E. Dailey, milkman, who found Clapp, said he saw no one

Woman, 70, Beaten To Death on Farm

Corunna, Ind., Jan. 25 (AP).—Mrs. S. C. Murray, 70, was beaten to death and Mrs. George Maxwell, with whom Mrs. Murray lived, was severly beaten today by an unknown man who invaded their farm home a mile west of here.

Mrs. Maxwell was taken to a hospital at Kendallville, where she was revived sufficiently to tell officers that a strange man had entered the house and attacked her and Mrs. Murray.

Prison Books Used to Cook Felons' Chops

200 in Gang Factions Ate Royally; 1,400 Others Starved.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Fourteen hundred inmates of Welfare Island Prison were forced to eat scanty and cold food, Commissioner Austin H. MacCormick disclosed today, while the other 200 cooked steaks and chops over blazing books from the prison library.

The new commissioner, driving ahead with his investigation that started with a surprise raid on the penitentiary, ordered steam tables built quickly so that all the prisoners could enjoy as nourishing food as the gang overlords who, he said, had been running the prison.

He stopped virtually all communication with the island, held the prison "favorites" in solitary confinement, placed drug addicts in the hospital and kept at his cell-by-cell search and netted additional narcotics and weapons.

U. S. Action Studied.

MacCormick said he would remain on the island two or three days.

Meanwhile, District Attorney William C. Dodge said he would make an independent inquiry into prison conditions. United States Attorney Martin Conboy conferred with Frank L. Igoe, supervising Federal narcotic agent, to determine whether the Federal Government could take action on the discovery of quantities of drugs in yesterday's raid.

"Politics will not play a part in my investigation," said Dodge. "I do not care who is hit. We will sift these appalling revelations to the bottom."

Gang Factions Segregated.

Sixty-eight associates of Joie Rao, described as the gang czar of the prison, were segregated in cells with their leader, as were the subordinates of Eddie Cleary, head of another prison faction.

These men, MacCormick said, had enjoyed the run of the island, kept carrier pigeons, and lived comfortably in the prison hospital. An investigation was started to ascertain whether these gangs had acted as agents for the sale of narcotics to other inmates, and whether the pigeons were used to bring the drugs to the island.

Commissioner MacCormick, remaining in active command of the penitentiary, appointed Lazarus Levy, acting head keeper of the Rikers Island Prison, as acting deputy warden. Levy replaced Daniel F. Sheehan, removed for neglect of duty.

Jinx Catches Steeplejack.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 25 (U.P.).—For more than 20 years James Barbee, 49, steeplejack, plied his hazardous trade without a mishap. Today he was all bunged up with broken ribs, abrasions and contusions. He fell down two steps at the City Welfare Station.

Duel Fails to Satisfy French Honor as 4 Shots Miss Marks

Paris, Jan. 25 (AP).—Two Frenchmen sought "satisfaction by arms" today in a huge football stadium, fired four small and ineffectual bullets at each other, and stalked away—still angered by a dispute over the Bayonne Pawnshop scandal.

Deputy Andre Hesse and John Beineix, lawyer and editor, faced each other at 32 yards in the Parc des Princes.

Both wore black, but eschewed the tophats prescribed by tradition in favor of derbies, which they tipped before the encounter. Thirty seconds, doctors and friends were present, surrounded by 20,000 empty seats.

Uninvited newspapermen and photographers scaled the walls of the stadium and watched from a distance, shivering, like the others, in a raw morning wind.

Hesse just escaped a bullet wound in the right shoulder when Beineix fired the fourth and last shot in the fight over the editor's article criticizing Hesse for acting as a lawyer for the late Serge Stavisky, founder of the Bayonne Municipal Pawnshop, which collapsed with a loss of $40,000,000 to investors.

Duelling is unlawful in France, but neither the police nor the courts are likely to act, since it is customary to ignore such encounters unless they result fatally.

That the duel was in deadly earnest was indicated by eyewitness accounts, which showed the men, who are political opponents, fired directly at each other.

Civil Works 'Graft' Sifted In 45 States

Officials Here Discount Fraud Charges as Complaints Grow.

Although 45 State set-ups were under scrutiny, officials of the Civil Works Administration yesterday continued to minimize the extent of graft on the works program.

West Virginia became the first State to take direct action on graft charges when its Legislature ordered an investigation of complaints there. Organized workers in that State threatened a strike, demanding higher wages and an inquiry into charges of political discrimination.

Despite official discounting of graft complaints, Secretary of the Interior Ickes announced he now had 92 investigators guarding the Public Works program, some of whom had been assigned to examine CWA complaints. This force, working under Louis Glavis, special agent for the Interior Department, is one of the largest ever to be assigned to departmental investigating.

2 Face Court Here Today.

Two local CWA supervisors, facing charges of larceny by trick in connection with a "pay off" scheme, will be arraigned in Police Court today. The men are Thomas Edgar Archer and Joe George McAlwee. Officials indicated they would request continuance of the cases pending further developments.

Meanwhile, Harry L. Hopkins, CWA administrator, conferred further with President Roosevelt about the fate of his program. Failure of the White House to forward its relief bill, involving $850,000,000, to Congress gave strength to the theory that the President is contemplating some sort of extension to the program to ease the discharge of 4,000,000 persons in the next three months.

West Virginia "Radicals" Blamed.

Hopkins was noncommittal as he left the conference, waving his hands to questions. Asked why the bill had not been sent to Capitol Hill as he predicted, he asserted it probably would go up today.

The West Virginia Legislature acted in the face of considerable confusion as to what was happening on the State CWA projects. Leaders of the Unemployed League, claiming a following of 5,000, asserted they would carry out a State-wide walkout for higher wages, investigation of working conditions, and inquire into political discrimination charges. William N. Beehler, State CWA administrator, declared he would welcome an investigation, and charged "radicals" were fomenting trouble among his workers.

Complaints Reach Keenan.

Legislative action was completed when the House approved a Senate resolution referring to "widespread complaints of mismanagement, favortism and political preference" in State CWA activities. A special committee of three Senators and three delegates was authorized to conduct the inquiry.

Although officials said the Interior Department of Investigation had 150 complaints of graft or political manipulation covering 45 States under study, Joseph B. Keenan, Assistant Attorney General, said only three complaints concerning the PWA program and not

Boy, Bound, Seen In Speeding Auto

Report Prompts Kidnap Probe in Oklahoma.

Oklahoma City, Jan. 25 (U.P.).—A possible kidnaping was reported to police late today when a group of school children said that they narrowly escaped being run over by an automobile containing three colored men who had a small white boy bound in the tonneau.

Radio orders were sent out immediately to all police cruisers to search for the automobile last seen near the city limits, headed for a rural highway. Police said that they had not received any report of a boy being missing.

The mysterious car was reported by a woman who said her children, on their way home from school, were in a group which was almost run down by the speeding automobile.

U. S. Moves To Compel Cotton Cut

Similar Action on Wheat Talked, With Farmers Boosting Crops.

By Raymond Clapper.

(Copyright, 1934, by The Washington Post.)

The White House is understood to have given a green light to a proposal for trying out compulsory restriction of cotton growing.

This experiment is suggested from the cotton belt because of the threatened breakdown of voluntary reduction measures.

Talk that similar compulsion should be applied to wheat also has started. But thus far the Administration has indicated no encouragement.

The proposed change from voluntary cooperation to forcible restriction involves a delicate problem of carrying majority support along wherever it is attempted. Therefore, officials here prefer to experiment only in cotton for the time being because a large proportion of Southern growers apparently want mandatory restraint applied to the minority of hardy individualists who are threatening to add to the surplus by increasing their yields.

Bankers Offer Bids.

Announcement that compulsory cotton restriction legislation would be pressed was made by Senator John H. Bankhead and his brother, Representative William B. Bankhead, both of Alabama, who have introduced identical bills in the Senate and House, after they had conferred with President Roosevelt. They did not reveal the President's position, except to state that it could be assumed they would not, as loyal Administration Democrats, push any measure to which the White House was opposed.

Later President Roosevelt discussed the proposal with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who advised him that 30,000 questionnaires were being sent into every cotton county to ascertain sentiment regarding the Bankhead bill. Secretary Wallace, cautiously approaching the proposal because of its mandatory character, also told Senator Bankhead he would support the measure if the cotton States appeared to want it. Senator Bankhead believes testimony from many farm leaders before the Senate Agriculture Committee recently already has provided an affirmative answer to the Administration.

Wheat, Corn Problems Similar.

The significance of the cotton measure is that it deals with a situation which is developing also in wheat and corn.

The Administration started out on a voluntary restriction program in basic farm commodities. Its theory was that by holding the price down and signing up farmers to cut acreage, it could hold them in line by benefit payments raised through processing taxes.

But political pressure forced the Administration to intervene and peg the price of cotton by making loans at 10 cents a pound. Lured by the prospect of good prices, cotton farmers throughout the South are reported to be preparing to raise a record crop. Sales of mules are unprecedented. In one northern Alabama county they were three times as large as last year. Tractor sales have gone up in Mississippi and Alabama. Fertilizer is being bought in greater volume.

Farmers are taking up land which has not been in cotton for five years, declaring it for cotton and then

Traylor Improves, But Still in Danger

Doctor Optimistic After Satisfactory Night.

Chicago, Jan. 25 (AP).—There was marked improvement today in the condition of Melvin A. Traylor, First National Bank president who was seriously ill with pneumonia.

Dr. Carl Johnson expressed optimism after an examination, but said the danger was not yet passed. The banker had a good night's sleep and was cheerful when he awoke.

"He is resting comfortably," said Dr. Johnson. "He had a breakfast consisting of orange juice, cereal and coffee. I can state that he is definitely improved. However, he will be kept under the oxygen tent for some time."

United G. O. P. Attack Delays Senate Action On Gold Bill Legality

Minority Leaders Warn Disaster Lurks in Gold Measure.

Barrage Empties Democratic Seats

Administration Men to Seek Vote Today, "Sure" of Victory.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

President Roosevelt's gold revaluation bill yesterday was subjected to a sharp and steady Republican bombardment, preventing all action on the measure or amendments to it, but leaving unruffled the Democratic leadership in the confidence that it has the Senate under control.

For the first time in this Congress the Republican minority in the Senate displayed some cohesion and unity of purpose in attacking the money bill. The assaults followed a carefully laid plan, with one Republican speaker following another, and more to come today.

Apparently stung by recent criticism that the Senate minority had failed in its duty to expound for the Nation and intelligently criticize all Administration proposals, the Republicans, led by Senator Hastings, of Delaware, campaign chairman this year, did their best to lay bare the gold bill.

Challenges Validity.

Senator Hastings' speech, which lasted 2 hours and 15 minutes, constituted the sharpest indictment yet made on the Senate floor against the bill. He termed the legislation "revolutionary" and "unconstitutional," arguing this latter point at great length.

The bill's provisions, he contended, were "more dangerous" than the Bryan silver program of 1896, yet they came from an Administration that won on a platform promising "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards." The measure attempted to "legalize robbery," he asserted, adding that it would "cripple" the Federal Reserve System and laid the foundation for "a huge central banking system controlled by the Government."

Warming up to his text, the rotund Delaware Republican declared the bill's "social results are hideous" and would mean "moral degradation of a covenant by the Government with its people." It permitted the Government to "rig" the market for its bonds and constituted the "most gigantic relief of speculators ever known in history," while "self-denial and thrift are penalized."

Democrats Absent.

During the Hastings speech the Democratic chairs were virtually empty. Democratic Leader Robinson tried to interrupt with questions, but Senator Hastings asked that he be questioned on concluding. A large number of Republic-

Mrs. Ickes Discovers Home Is "Real Job"

MRS. HAROLD L. ICKES,
wife of Secretary of Interior Ickes, yesterday announced that the combined jobs of wife in a Democratic Cabinet and Republican member of the Illinois Legislature were "too complicated." She has decided to quit the latter office.

(Associated Press.)

The situation of being simultaneously a Cabinet wife in Washington and a Republican legislator in Illinois has become "too complicated" for even energetic Mrs. Harold L. Ickes, and so she announced yesterday she wouldn't run again.

"Three times in three weeks I went out there and back!" she said, immediately after announcing "with deep regret" her decision to cease representing the Chicago residential-industrial-suburban district that thrice elected her.

Several of her reasons simmered down to the old-fashioned tenet that, after all is said and done in

Labor Plans To Seek New Recognition

Wagner Asserts Shorter Hours Needed; Company Unions Scored.

A legislative program to outlaw company unions and strengthen the position of labor in NRA administration was agreed upon yesterday by heads of all the country's principal labor unions meeting with the executive heads of the American Federation of Labor.

The union leaders heard Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the National Labor Board, declare that the hours of labor must be further decreased and wages increased to avoid future social strife.

The American Federation of Labor adopted a program to push future labor organization "in whatever form or method is best designed to rally the wage earners to the cause of organized labor." The Federation thus settled an internal controversy between craft unions and so-called "Federal" unions, in order to present a united front.

The legislative program, adopted by organized labor generally, to strengthen its position in relation to the Recovery Act, includes:

An amendment to the National Recovery Act provides for adequate representation of labor on all code authorities.

Liquor Board Choices Here Now in Doubt

"We're Not Sure," Allen Says After Session at White House.

Personnel of the District alcoholic beverage control board was thrown in doubt suddenly yesterday when Commissioner George E. Allen was called unexpectedly to the White House to discuss local liquor matters with Marvin H. McIntyre, of the President's secretarial staff.

The Commissioners' plan to appoint George W. Offutt, Mrs. William Beverly Mason and Isaac Gans as members of the board had been announced previously at the District Building, but after Mr. Allen's White House conference he told newspaper reporters "the Commissioners have not made up their minds."

This was in marked contrast to the apparent certainty felt about the matter at the formal board meeting of the Commissioners earlier in the day. At that time formal appointment of the three was delayed only because Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen was reported ill. It was agreed to let the formal action go over until Commissioner Hazen returned, which was expected to be today.

Both Commissioner Allen and Mr. McIntyre denied the membership of the beverage board had

Station Plaza Traffic Tangle Shatters Congressional Nerve

Members of Congress and their constituents are having so much trouble dodging taxicabs and street cars in Union Station Plaza that they decided yesterday to ask the District Commissioners to do something about it.

Chairman Norton of the House District Committee addressed a letter to the Commissioners asking an immediate study of the problem.

Her request came after Representative Oliver (Democrat), New York, had suggested informally that subways be built beneath the plaza so it could be left entirely to vehicular traffic and pedestrians escape the present hazard.

He termed the traffic situation in front of the Union Station "the worst in the country."

Mrs. Norton, in her letter to the Commissioners, said: "Conditions there constitute one of the greatest dangers to pedestrians I have ever observed. There are no traffic policemen and no traffic lights There are half a dozen entrances to the roadways in front of the plaza, and the roadways themselves are curved and broad.

"Pedestrians are dazed and bewildered as they cross the broad roadways with cars coming at a rapid pace from all sides."

She added she would be glad to cooperate in and promoting any plan the Commissioners may decide upon.

Kansas Official Wins Acquittal

Impeachment of Boynton in Bond Scandal Is Refused.

Topeka, Kans., Jan. 25 (AP).—The Kansas Senate court of impeachment acquitted Attorney General Roland Boynton of misdemeanor charges today and then took up the trial of State Auditor Will J. French, also accused of dereliction in office, as an outgrowth of the State forged bond scandal.

On only one of the four articles of impeachment on which Boynton was tried was there a majority for conviction. The vote was 22 to 18, or five less than the required two-thirds majority.

"I feel that I have been fully vindicated," the attorney general said.

The charges against both Boynton and French were brought by the House of Representatives, in connection with the operations of Ronald Finney, 35-year-old broker, sentenced for engineering the million-dollar bond swindle.

Boynton and French are not involved in criminal charges, but were accused in the impeachment articles of permitting or conspiring to allow Finney to defraud the State.

Labor Party Rejects MacDonald's Daughter

London, Jan. 25 (AP).—Miss Ishbel MacDonald, eldest daughter of the prime minister, has been rejected by the Labor party in South Poplar as a candidate for municipal elections next month.

Some attributed the action to her father's break with the party at large. Miss MacDonald was elected a member of the council of London Borough in 1931.

Four Charged With Murder In Lynching

Hazard, Ky., Jan. 25 (AP).—Four men were held and more arrests were predicted by Perry County officials late today as they pressed their investigation of the lynching of the Negro slayer of a coal miner last night.

Murder warrants were sworn out today against three miners, Lee Gibson, 37; Andy Workman, 30, and Petie Carroll, 38, and another man, James Collins, was held by order of County Judge William Cross. A special grand jury was ordered by Circuit Judge Sam Ward to convene Monday.

"We have some good information, but I can't talk about it yet," Judge Gross said. He added there would be no formal inquiry until the grand jury met.

Retaliation Threatened.

There are some 800 Negroes in Hazard, a town of 7,000 population in the center of a coal-mining district, and threats of retaliation for the lynching were heard. Commenting on the threats, Judge Gross said: "Those threats came to nothing and there'll be no trouble."

Meanwhile telegrams poured in upon Gov. Ruby Laffoon at Frankfort deploring the first 1934 lynching and urging him and all State and county officers involved to aid in convicting the members of the mob. The Negro, Alex Scott, 20, a former convict, was taken from jail here last night, hanged in a mountain graveyard in adjoining Knott County and a score or more of bullets fired into his body.

Victim Clubbed to Death.

Ale Johnson, 21, a coal miner, whom Scott was alleged to have beaten with a stick here last Saturday night, died shortly after the lynching.

The Kentucky House of Representatives unanimously adopted a resolution by W. B. Belknap (Democrat), of Goshen, declaring: "The terrible crime of lynching tends to spread when not punished," expressing confidence that the governor desired to prevent mob violence and offering its support in any such action he might take.

Maryland Sheriff Gets His Job Back

Reinstated After Acquittal for "Tipsy" Driving.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.). Sheriff Charles W. Crum announced today the reappointment of Deputy Sheriff Frank O. Lowery, whose commission was withdrawn following an automobile accident near Nyersville two weeks ago.

After an investigation by State Road Officer Cecil, Lowery was arrested charged with driving while drunk and reckless driving.

At the trial before Magistrate J. Hollin Kefauver, Middletown, last night, at which six witnesses testified for the State, Lowery was found not guilty. Sheriff Crum then reinstated Lowery as deputy for Jackson District.

these feministic times, a wife's place is with her husband. That's where she had just been, dashing in after lunch with a friend from New Mexico. And in the outer office of the Secretary of the Interior, smiling Mrs. Ickes answered questions.

"The situation was becoming just too complicated," she said. "Naturally I'm enthusiastic over the Administration here. If I had known what was going to happen to my husband, I wouldn't have run for reelection, but I couldn't resign, for that would have left my district unrepresented.

"Since Mr. Ickes' home is here indefinitely, and commuting back and forth is not satisfactory, either from my point of view or that of the district I represent, I felt it important to make the decision, and do it in time to give the district time to pick my successor."

Once Mrs. Ickes lunched in Chicago and arrived in Washington in time to go to the first official reception held by the Roosevelts in the White House. Again, with time difference in her favor, she lunched with Mrs. Roosevelt and got home in time for dinner at her Chicago place in Hubbards Woods.

She's not deserting her constituents even now, Mrs. Ickes made clear. Her term does not expire until next January.

"I am going to the next special session of the Legislature, and I look forward to an interesting session," she said.

Although she has been in Washington only on a part-time basis, she already has made a record as among the most energetic and public-spirited women in official life.

ans sat around him, but they did not need to be converted.

Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, devoted himself almost wholly to denying the Constitutionality of the measure. Senators Barbour and Kean, both of New Jersey, followed, attacking the wisdom and practicality of the bill. The day's debate was brought to a close by a spirited plea from Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, for adoption of the committee amendment putting the stabilization fund under control of a five-man board.

Reed Winds Up Today.

The Republican case will be summed up today by Senator David A. Reed, Pennsylvania. Instead of meeting the Republican attack, the Democratic leaders commenced to press for action on the bill. Senator Robinson warned that unless the bill is passed today, the Senate would have to meet tomorrow and would be kept in session "until a late hour."

He successfully moved that the meeting hour today be advanced one hour, 11 a. m., instead of noon. The Administration leaders said they had sufficient votes to defeat not only the amendment for a five-man stabilization board but also the proposals for purchase of silver and to make currency inflation mandatory through utilization of a part of the "profit" resulting from dollar devaluation.

Consequently, they explained, nothing was to be gained by arguing with the Republican Conservatives and delaying passage of the bill. Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, said he also had polled his colleagues and could count only 26 for his proposal to make the currency inflation aspects of the measure mandatory. Nevertheless, he said he would force the issue. The silver bloc likewise will force a vote on its purchase proposal.

Senator Hastings said he did not wish to appear partisan, but that he could not be expected to support the bill solely because the Administration wished its passage. He declared the plea of last spring that patriotism demanded support for the President in his war on the depression could not be made in behalf of this measure, which, in effect, was permanent legislation.

"Violations" Cited.

The bill violates two important provisions of the Constitution "in that Congress undertakes to delegate to the President its own duty and responsibility with respect to coining money and fixing the value thereof; and, secondly, it undertakes to legalize robbery by taking property of our citizens without due process of law and without just compensation," Senator Hastings, a former State appellate judge, asserted.

"In addition to that," he went on, "this bill destroys the gold base for our circulating currency, builds up a huge central political banking system within the Government and gives to one man the complete control of the enormous sum of $2,000,000,000 to be known as a 'stabilization fund,' a fund clearly intended for use in speculation in foreign exchange.

"One unfortunate provision with respect to this fund is that neither the President nor his Secretary of Treasury are required to give any information to the public with respect to it until three years and three months after the law becomes effective, and that happens to be three months after the present term of the President expires."

Fears End of Reserve.

He contended the Federal Reserve System "is to be so crippled by this legislation that it will be of little or no value in the future" and that "within a short time we shall have recommendations to abolish it altogether."

Already the Government is obtaining control of the banks through RFC purchases of preferred bank stock and the pending bil would complete the centralization of the Nation's banks under Washington control, he argued.

"As I see it," he continued, "the social results of this bill are hideous. It is a moral degradation and repudiation of a covenant by the Government with its people. We shall later see the cruel effect of stimulated and sustained speculation by wiser citizens whose plunder comes from the ignorant and poor.

"Self-denial and thrift are penalized. The economic effect is just the opposite of what is intended. It concentrates wealth, instead of diffusing it. It ultimately will impoverish the whole people. As wages and salaries rise more slowly than prices, these classes will suffer in favor of equity holders of stock.

"The insurance policy, savings bank and other bank deposits, and all small investors, which in total comprise the majority of the creditors, will lose. The fact that it will help the debtor, if it be a fact, will not overcome these severe penalties upon others."

Sees Greenback Threat.

Senator Hastings said he could not share the belief held by some persons that passage of this bill would end the threat of "greenbacks." He pointed out the "greenback" section of the Thomas amendment remained, and contended that "just as certain as we continue to increase our public debt, the President will be compelled to take advantage of the authority thus given him."

"But for my part, I can not see that that printing-press money is not as valuable as any other currency when this act becomes the law of the land," he added, explaining that as long as gold remained as a redeemable base for currency and through the proposed Thomas amendment redemption fund, there was some hope of "making good" the "greenbacks."

Citing Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau's inexperience in financial matters, Senator Hastings predicted that in operation of the stabilization fund the British would give this country a drubbing, with the loss of the $2,000,000,000 fund.

Power Feature Assailed.

Senator Austin maintained that the broad powers delegated under the bill represented an improper delegation by Congress of its Constitutional authority and duties. He said that while minor functions might be delegated, the courts would not approve of Congress conferring its prfmary duties on another.

This argument was challenged by Senator Robinson, who maintained the courts had been clear in setting up the rule that Congress can choose its agent to carry out its powers, so long as proper limitations were fixed and a rule defined for the exercise of the power.

Senator Reed entered the argument to observe that this was true but that "the trouble with the legislation before us is that it delegates the authority without prescribing the rule of action."

Senator Borah remarked that "it seems as well defined here as it was in the act creating the Tariff Commission and giving to it the power to levy taxes."

It was Senator Kean's contention that the bill transferred the country's currency from a gold basis to "a fiat basis." For the first time since Alexander Hamilton, he added, the holder of currency could not hope to redeem it in gold.

Holds 60 Pct. Too Low.

Senator Kean contended that 60 per cent was too low a revaluation for the dollar and that within two years the stabilization fund would be lost trying to keep the dollar down to that point. He said that revalualon should take place at not less than 66 2-3 per cent and said he would again press his amendment to make the range for devaluation between 65 and 70 per cent.

Senator Barbour, as did Senator Kean, recited the effect which cheapening of the dollar would have on wage earners. He said he hoped the President's policy would prove beneficial to the country, but that he was fearful the whole undertaking, so hastily prepared and passed, would in the end prove more harmful than helpful.

Secretary Morgenthau's retention of Earle Baille as an adviser after the latter's forced resignation as a special assistant was criticized when Senator Vandenburg took the floor. The latter assailed the idea that the stabilization fund would be operated by three unidentified persons in the Treasury, unless the five-man board proposal were adopted. He said the country had a right to know who was managing the fund, for their identity was a forecast of the wisdom of operation.

Baille's Record Lashed.

Senator Arthur Robinson (Republican), of Indiana, interrupted to point out that Mr. Baille, the New York banker who was under fire several weeks ago prior to his resignation, was still advising Mr. Morgenthau and attending important Treasury conferences. He said Mr. Baille probably would be one of the proposed unidentified managers of the fund.

"If he is, I hope he will be more successful than he was in the Tricontinental transaction and I hope he will not offer any bribes to any officials or sons of officials of foreign countries as he did to the son of President Legula of Peru," the Hoosier asserted, recalling the basis for criticism against Mr. Baille.

Later Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, announced Mr. Baille was leaving town last night and had severed all connection with the Treasury.

Another Note Urges Ransom In Bremer Case

Women Describe Kidnaping License Reported Revealed.

St. Paul, Jan. 25 (AP).—Another anonymous note, written perhaps by the kidnap gang holding Edward G. Bremer, wealthy St. Paul bank president, for $200,000 ransom, was tossed into the grabbag of meager clews in the case today.

It was mailed in St. Paul and addressed to a man described as a friend to the missing banker and his father, Adolph Bremer. It was reported the note, written in pencil and not signed by the captive president and owner of the Commercial State Bank, urged immediate ransom payment.

Federal Department of Justice investigators, to whom the missive was turned over, were in doubt as to whether it was the work of a crank or from the gang.

Disclosure that the latest anonymouse note had been received came as two women who said they saw the abduction of Bremer gave information today that may lead to the lair of the kidnapers. One woman said she saw a struggle in the Bremer car after he had taken his young daughter to school, while the other was reported to have given the license number of the car in which he was carried away.

In Chicago, city police and Federal authorities hunted Charles "Ice Wagon" Connors and another suspect, both wanted for questioning in the case.

Connors, a former Minnesota convict, was indicted with Roger Tuohy and four others for the kidnaping of John Factor. Toughy and three associates are now on trial in connection with the Factor case.

Drug Suspects Freed on Bond

Three Men and Woman Post Total of $30,500 for Appearance.

Bonds were fixed yesterday by United States Commissioner Turnage when four persons, three men and one woman, were arraigned before him on charges of sale or possession of narcotics.

Alfred L. Maggio, 26, was released on $15,000. He was accused of sale and possession.

His wife is charged with possessing narcotics and was released on $500 bond. Joseph S. Cohen, 30, and James E. Snow, 37, also charged with sale and possession, were released on bonds of $7,500 each.

The arraignment of the four followed by one day arraignment of five other persons—three men and two women—on narcotic charges. The District grand jury is expected to act on the cases before preliminary hearing before the United States Commissioner.

Two Youths Held On Theft Charges

Two 17-year-old youths, reputed leaders of a juvenile gang of housebreakers and automobile thieves, were held for grand jury action in Police Court yesterday, after they pleaded not guilty to joyriding charges and their bond was set at $2,000 each.

The alleged gang leaders, Edward Warren and Richard Washington, both colored, were said to have stolen the machine of George Barrett, 50 Rhode Island avenue northwest. Together with George Thompson, 16, Braynard Butler, 16, and Ulysses Robinson, 16, all colored, they were arrested by police of the Ninth Precinct.

The youths are said to have escaped from the National Training School for Boys. Police reported the found jewelry and clothing valued at $700 when they raided an apartment maintained by the boys.

Liquor Board Choices Here Now in Doubt

"We're Not Sure," Allen Says After Session at White House.

been discussed. They said they had talked only about the amendments to the District liquor law, which had been recommended by the Attorney General and Federal liquor administrator and transmitted by the President to Congress the day he signed the law.

Nonetheless rumor persisted that influential friends of one or another of the ignored candidates had registered a strong protest at the White House against the selections of the Commissioners.

John F. Costello, Democratic National committeeman for the District, said neither he nor the local party organization had taken any hand in the matter. He denied responsibility for the statement made public by Capt. Conway W. Cooke, of the local auxiliary committee. The Cooke statement protested that party loyalty and work apparently was the surest door to political oblivion in the District.

Faithful Back Cooke.

Although the District organization put forward no candidate for the beverage board, the Cooke statement struck a responsive chord among Democrats generally. Several who have been active in party work were urged on the Commissioners for appointment.

Fire of criticism apparently centered on selection of Mr. Gans. It was charged he is a Republican. Mr. Gans said he had contributed to the Republican campaigns, but deprecated the importance of his political affiliations, saying he was a voteless resident of the District.

Commissioner Allen said there was no more question about the appointment of Mr. Gans than there was about the appointment of Mr. Offutt. The question of how many women should be named to the board also was still open, the Commissioner said. He added, however, that he expected the whole question to be settled by formal action tomorrow.

It was Commissioner Allen who advocated appointment of two women to the board. He proposed naming Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the President, but this move is said to have met with the disapproval of Mrs. Wilson.

Friends of Ernest G. Walker denied they had sought White House action on his behalf and Mr. Walker himself protested that he had not been a candidate and had not asked the Commissioners to name him.

"I do not mind reasonable use of my name in the political gossip naturally incident to the filling of various offices, but I am certainly not a candidate for every office which may be vacant," Mr. Walker said.

Labor Chief Has Backing.

Representations were said to have been lodged with Mr. McIntyre by members of both House and Senate. Richard A. Dickson, president of the District Central Labor Union and vice president of the Maryland Federation of Labor, had strong backing in the House. He is a member of the District Democratic Central Committee.

Names of others are said to have been presented the Commissioners with indorsement of various members of House and Senate, all of which were ignored by the Commissioners.

Maj. John C. Gotwals, Engineer Commissioner, who has kept pretty much in the background and let the civilian Commissioners take the lead in choosing the Beverage Board, said last night that Mr. Offutt, Mrs. Mason and Mr. Gans were his first choice. Although he learned of Commissioner Allen's White House visit only through the newspapers, Maj. Gotwals said he knew of no reason why the three would not be appointed soon.

Plans Speakeasy Drive.

Turning aside from what he said was the undecided board membership, Commissioner Allen announced his purpose to launch an intensive campaign against speakeasies.

"I expected to confer with Commissioner Hazen tomorrow," Mr. Allen said. "The law is so liberal that I am going to insist upon its strict enforcement."

Peddler's Love for Dog Gives New Lease on Life to 'Blackie'

New York, Jan. 25 (U.P.).—A stay of execution brought Blackie, a dog suffering from an incurable disease, and his apple-peddler master, Frank Clemenzo, back for the second time today to the courtroom of Magistrate Anna Kross.

Clemenzo's refusal to accept the death penalty, and his devotion to the dying pet, brought a reversal of the megistrate's death verdict and another chance for Blackie.

The peddler was in court today and heard Herbert S. Towne, an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, testify Blackie should be killed.

Blackie, eyes closed, shivered under a thin blanket in an anteroom, unaware that his master was pleading for his life.

"Before I have my dog killed, I go to jail," he shouted, and then dashed from the room to Blackie's side. In a moment he was back, just in time to hear the magistrate's sentence.

"I am sorry for you," she said, "because I appreciate you love your dog dearly. It's the same way with people who love their children."

Clemenzo again rushed to Blackie, but in a moment he returned to the courtroom.

"Judge," he shouted, "I want to get an injunction to keep them from killing my dog."

"There's something about the man that arouses my sympathy," the court announced. "I revoke the death sentence so he can get his own doctors in court."

"I get one-two-three-four doctors, the best in New York, to say my Blackie can be cured," Clemenzo promised.

Earned Income Tax Rate Cut To Be Sought

House Group Approves Placing Rate to $4,000 in Class.

sentatives from other States having community estate laws.

In eight such States at the present time husbands and wives are permitted to file separate returns, sharing their income, regardless of which earned it. Thus they are able to escape the higher surtax brackets. The committee's proposal, which Representative Hill contends is unconstitutional, would defeat this practice.

Morgenthau Sees Increased Revenue.

Secretary Morgenthau argued the change would result in increased collections in all 48 States by forcing the combined earnings of married couples into the surtax brackets.

He said the existing situation causes numerous transfers, sales, assignments and other arrangements between husbands and wives "which have no real basis and are made because of a desire to avoid income taxes otherwise due."

In providing some relief for the salary earner, the committee agreed to allow a 10 per cent deduction for net earned incomes of $8,000 and under, with the first $3,000 presumed to be earned, for administrative purposes. The provision means a net loss of $10,000,000 in revenues.

The earned income relief provision was sponsored by Representative Isaac Bacharach (Republican), New Jersey, after the Treasury "strongly" advised the committee to observe the principle of a lower tax on earned income than on investments.

"Since the burden of taxation will necessarily be heavy during the next few years, it is the more essential that the burden be distributed as equitably as possible," the Treasury recommended.

Potential Revenue Lost.

In deciding to drop their original proposal to reduce depreciation and depletion allowances by 25 per cent for the next three years, the committee acceded to Treasury contentions that the proposal was "inherently unfair" and of "doubtful constitutionality." In striking out the provision, $85,000,000 in potential revenues was lost to the bill.

Other provisions written into the measures at yesterday's committee meeting follow:

1. The capital gains and losses section was completely rewritten to provide for a sliding scale for estimating the gain or loss for tax purposes, according to the length of time the property was held. Capital losses would be strictly limited to capital gains.

2. Partnership tax laws were tightened so a partnership could not escape the capital gains tax, by stepping up the price of property acquired from one of the partners. If losses exceed gains in a partnership, individual partners could not take advantage of the loss in computing their own personal tax returns.

Levy on Holding Companies.

3. The committee agreed to the subcommittee plan to levy a 35 per cent tax on the "undistributed adjusted net incomes" of personal holding companies, characterized by the committee as "incorporated pocketbooks." The provision would mean $25,000,000 more in annual revenues.

4. Dividends out of earnings or profits accumulated before March 1, 1913, now tax exempt, would be made subject to Federal levies, swelling revenues $6,000,000 annually.

The committee today plans to take final action on two other proposals, one preventing foreign income taxes from being credited against Federal income tax payments, and the other blocking indefinite tax postponements now possible under corporate reorganizations.

Representative Robert L. Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, chairman of the committee, said he hopes to get the bill before the House by Wednesday.

Libraries Are Not Just Book Exchanges; Branches Soon Become Community Clubs

Subbranches Housed in Queerly Assorted Makeshifts.

By Felix Bruner.

Neighborhood libraries are something more than merely places to borrow books or to look up references.

They are really community centers, almost community clubs. They are meeting places for organizations, they are places where friends meet, they are places where many pleasant hours can be spent in reading.

Librarians are not merely persons who look up books and mark the borrowers' cards. They are advisers and friends, and they are called upon to answer all manner of questions.

These are some of the impressions gathered from a rather hurried visit to some of Washington's branch libraries. In a flivver driven by Dr. George F. Bowerman, librarian, the writer hopped from one library to another, meeting members of the staffs and learning of their work.

Proud of Their Work.

Without exception, one gathers that these staff members are proud of their libraries and proud of their work. They have established themselves as a part of the neighborhoods they serve and they have become friends and advisers of children and grown-ups in these neighborhoods.

The first library visited was the Southeastern Branch, on Seventh street southeast, just off Pennsylvania avenue. This library is in a modest neighborhood, near school buildings, which it serves. But the library serves more than the school children. That is a fact of which the staff is proud.

When the branch was opened 11 years ago, the majority of borrowers were children. Now the number of adult borrowers is about equal to the number of children who borrow books.

There are two explanations. One is that some of the adult borrowers are among those who learned to use the library during its early days when they were children. The other is that children are bringing their parents to the library in increasing numbers.

There was some objection to the location of the library when it was erected, Dr. Bowerman said, but he declares it has more than justified itself, not only as an adjunct of the schools in the neighborhood, but in helping greatly in adult education.

Newest of Branches.

The next visit was made to the Northeastern Branch, Maryland avenue and Seventh street northeast. This is the newest of the branches. It is housed in a beautiful building of Georgian architecture. Already it has become an important part of the community which it serves and its "business" is rapidly growing.

The third visit was to a much different type of library. This was the Woodridge subbranch at 2206 Rhode Island avenue northeast. This library occupies a rented building that looks from the outside much like a storeroom, but the inside is cheery as well as efficient. The community is proud of this library and eagerly supports it.

Of all the branch libraries, one gets the impression that this is most truly a community project. Unfortunately, this library, like other subbranches, must be operated by a very small staff and is open only 32 hours a week.

Another subbranch, the Tenley library, occupies a building at 4539 Wisconsin avenue that was formerly a police station. Marks on the floor, showing the location of the old jail bars, are the only hint that the place ever was a precinct house. It is small, but it has the appearance of always having been a library. Dr. Bowerman hopes that this subbranch can eventually be enlarged and sometime replaced by a larger building.

Does Excellent "Business."

The Mount Pleasant branch, the last one visited, is at Sixteenth and Lamont streets northwest, in a thickly populated residential and apartment-house neighborhood. It is the largest and finest of all the branches. It resembles a main library and does as much business as many small-city main libraries.

The last annual report of Dr. Bowerman says this of branch libraries:

"The combined services of the four major branches, measured simply by their home circulation of books (that is, omitting their large and important reference services to their communities), make an impressive total of 1,041,822 volumes, nearly 40 per cent of the entire circulation of the library system. The record of the Mount Pleasant branch of 421,782 volumes circulated puts it in the class of such entire public library systems as those of Scranton, Pa.; Fort Worth, Tex., and Nashville, Tenn.

"The Northeastern branch circulation in its first full year of operation was 265,424 volumes. A count made during a typical week of persons entering the adult department and those actually taking out books shows that slightly under half did their reading and studying in the library building and left with no books for home use.

"The Southeastern branch circulated 216,193 volumes, and the Takoma Park branch, 138,423.

Makeshift Quarters.

"The five minor or subbranches include several types of agencies: Conduit road, housed in a one-room abandoned school house, located in a rather sparsely populated neighborhood and conducted by a single librarian; Tenley, housed in an abandoned police station, serving a fairly populous section, with a staff of two; Eastern High, occupying a single room in a high school building, with a staff of two; Chevy Chase and Woodridge, both in specially built rental quarters, each serving a large and populous area and with a staff of three each.

"All subbranches are open but 32 hours a week. The circulation of each, and especially of Chevy Chase and Woodridge, equals or exceeds that of many a full-fledged library branch in some cities. They justify full hours of opening, but the necessary staffs are lacking.

"The minor branch circulations were: Chevy Chase, 85,547 volumes; Conduit road, 27,822; Eastern High, 59,128; Tenley, 60,353, and Woodridge, 86,913."

U. S. Moves to Force Cotton Slash as Farmers Dodge Cut

renting to the Government 40 per cent of it and cultivating the remaining 60 per cent. In some sections there is a tendency to divide farms and rent one portion to a tenant who would be exempt from restriction contracts. Similarly some families are dividing up farms to escape voluntary restrictions already pledged on a portion of their acreage. Under such conditions, it is feared production can not be cut sufficiently without compulsory restraint.

Licenses Proposed.

The Bankhead bills as introduced provided for control by licensing ginners and forbidding them to gin any cotton except when accompanied by a Federal license stipulating the farmer's allotted and permitted yield. Because of constitutional questions the Administration has suggested changing this control feature and placing a confiscatory tax on cotton offered for sale in excess of that allotted to each farmer.

A similar situation is threatened in corn since the Government, following the corn belt farm strike, stepped in and made corn loans at 45 cents a bushel, serving to peg prices at that level.

In wheat, indications are that in spite of the voluntary curtailment drive wheat acreage now seeded is only 4 per cent below that planted last year. Because of this situation Mrs. Kathryn McCarthy, representative from Kansas, has introduced bills proposing to license producers and providing for a tax on expansion of acreage. She says that whereas regular wheat farmers are cooperating, others on the edge of the corn and cotton belts have gone into wheat in the hope of getting in on higher prices.

Wallace Warns of Disaster.

In discussing compulsory cotton control in a radio address this week, Secretary Wallace said:

"If the higher world prices for cotton make it profitable for farmers to abandon this cooperative adjustment and return to the old method of blind competition, it is apparent that fresh disasters may result. If this be the case, there may be a need for some sort of compulsion to prevent the piling up of unusable surpluses of cotton which have resulted in poverty and misery for the whole South.

"In discussing the principle of compulsory control of cotton production with the Senate Agricultural Committee last week, I said it would be much simpler from an administrative standpoint to abandon the voluntary method for the compulsory approach. But from the standpoint of the future of democratic government, I feel we should approach this sort of thing very carefully and only after thorough public debate.

If the people feel the emergency is of such extraordinary intensity that they want the centralizing power of the Government brought in in a compulsory way, then I feel we should give most careful consideration to the possibility of utilizing Federal powers to enforce the sound and economic programs for agriculture now being offered farmers on a voluntary basis. But we ought to ask ourselves whether once the Government had that power, the people themselves might find it repugnant and would, in the end, revolt against it."

Bank Bandits Shoot 1, Flee Empty Handed

Blountsville, Ala., Jan. 25 (AP). Three bandits held a cashier and stenographer of the Bank of Blountsville captive for an hour and a half today, wounded a customer and fled, guns blazing, without any cash.

Failure of the wounded customer, J. E. Janey, to understand the command to join C. O. Davis, cashier; Miss Irene Bailey, stenographer, and two customers in the bank vault brought shots from the bandits, and they fled as Haney dropped with two bullets in his arm.

Mortgage Holiday Attack Answered

Minnesotan Tells Jones U. S. Inefficiency to Blame.

Representative Lundeen (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, yesterday took vigorous exception to a recent statement of Jesse Jones, RFC chairman, and John H. Fahey, Home Lone Board chairman, that mortgage relief was being retarded by State moratorium laws.

In an open letter to the two, Lundeen said that "had the machinery set up by the Feedral Administration functioned properly and brought swift relief, there would be no talk of embarrassment now."

He quoted a telegram from Attorney General Peterson of Minnesota, who said, "It is evident that mortgage moratorium laws are still needed and desirable, because of the failure of the Federal Government and its agencies to provide needed money."

Chautemps Hints Cabinet May Quit

Further Stavisky Scandal Attacks Feared.

Paris, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Stavisky-Bayonne pawnship scandal appeared today to be pushing the cabinet of Premier Camille Chautemps toward resignation.

Chautemps and several other ministers told friends "it might be preferable to get out instead of being dragged through the mud of Chamber debate again and then be thrown out."

After fierce attacks, the cabinet Tuesday received a vote of confidence from the Chamber on the issue.

more than 15 on the CWA program had been referred to him. In addition, he said, vague reports about North Carolina, New York, Pennsylvania and Alabama had reached him, but that evidence for prosecution was lacking.

No Complaints in Three States.

The only States from which CWA graft complaints have not been received, officials disclosed, are Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. Most of the complaints involved charges of unjust discrimination in picking workers. However, more serious charges of padding pay rolls, job selling and falsifying of accounts are known to have been received.

Under a setup decided upon by Hopkins and Ickes, complaints are turned over to the Interior Department investigating agency. Here they are sifted, and those indicating criminal charges are turned over to the Department of Justice, while others indicating discrimination on the part of State administrators are sent back to Hopkins. It was stated that statutes exist to cover prosecution of all but the discrimination charges.

Say "Graft" Is "Overplayed."

Secretary Ickes indicated he was taking his precautions before his PWA program got into full construction swing. He said he expected to use his 92 investigators in cases of "skullduggery."

Meanwhile, Frank Bane, director of the American Public Welfare Association, addressing a meeting of social service workers in Washington, defended the Civil Works program.

Any graft or inefficiency uncovered so fr is largely outweighed by the benefits accruing to the 4,000,000 employes, he declared.

The same idea was expressed by CWA officials who claimed the "graft idea" was being "overplayed."

Court Cuts Fees Of Bank Receivers

Richmond, Jan. 25 (AP).—Fees allowed the receivers of the closed American Bank & Trust Co. of Richmond by the Richmond City Circuit Court were reduced 25 per cent in a decree signed today by Judge Julien Gunn.

While the reduction is permissive rather than mandatory, arising from the voluntary offer of the three receivers, T. Justin Moore, Sherlock Bronson and the Bank of Commerce & Trusts, to return a fourth of their fees in the public interest, it will result in an immediate rebate of $11,917.58 to the closed bank.

"The two adversaries gave proof of much calm courage," he said. "The bullets just missed and the last, which Beineix fired, grazed the right shoulder of Hesse, without, however, hitting. It is certain that both adversaries missed being hit by a slight margin."

The result was not satisfactory, the duelists said. Instead of shaking hands, as is customary, they stalked off with their attendants. Police arrived just in time to find the group hurrying through a side gate.

near and immediately summoned police.

Clapp went on duty at midnight Wednesday. Fellow-officers said he was in good spirits and laughed and joked as he drove off in the police car.

The policeman patrols alone in the machine. The theory that perhaps he was pursuing another car and crashed into the tree was considered by investigators.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald ordered an autopsy. He said results would not be known until this morning. Preliminary examination of the body, he said, showed the bullet entered Clapp's right temple and left at the base of his skull. Powder burns were in evidence, Dr. MacDonald declared, showing the shot was fired at close range.

Clapp was married and lived at 647 Kenyon street northwest. He had been on the force since 1924.

Week of Opera Opens Monday

San Carlo Company to Present Favorites at National Theater.

Opera in Italian, French, German and English will be heard during the week's engagement of the San Carlo Opera Company, which opens in the National Theater Monday night. The list of operas announced for presentation includes four that have not been heard in this city for several years, "La Boheme," "Madama Butterfly," "Martha" and "Hansel and Gretel."

Old operagoers will find a sentimental interest in rehearing Puccini's musical version of John Luther Long's tragic tale of the Japanese girl and the American naval lieutenant. For it was in Washington that "Madama Butterfly" had its American premiere 27 years ago in the Columbia Theater. It was produced in English by the Henry W. Savage organization, and the titular role was sung by Elsa Szamosy, a young Hungarian soprano who had been recommended to Savage by Puccini.

On that occasion Joseph Sheehan was heard as B. F. Pinkerton, and Winfred Goff as Sharpless. Tito Ricordi, son of Puccini's publisher, came expressly from Italy to stage the opera. After the premiere here, Savage took the opera to New York.

The repertoire of the San Carlo Company is as follows: Monday, January 29, "La Boheme;" Tuesday, "Madama Butterfly;" Wednesday matinee, "Martha;" Wednesday night, "Aida;" Thursday, "Carmen" (in French); Friday, "Lohengrin" (in German); Saturday matinee, "Hansel and Gretel" (in English); Saturday night, "Il Trovatore."

"Son of Kong" Reviewed at Metropolitan—New Week's Screen and Stage Bills

Original Leads Survive in Tale of Lost Island at the Met.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

"SON OF KONG." RKO-Radio picturization of a sequel to "King Kong." by Ruth Rose, featuring Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack, Frank Reicher, John Marsten, Victor Wong, Noble Johnson and Ed Brady. Directed by Ernest B. Schoedsack; chief technician, Willis O'Brien. Reviewed Wednesday morning.

By Nelson B. Bell.

The "Son of Kong" is not the whale of a fellow his daddy was!

When "King Kong" was released it unfolded a fantastic tale which, despite its fabulous use of prehistoric monsters as essential figures in the action and its reliance upon terrifying situations as a potent element of fascination, created a definite illusion of actuality and reconstructed with startling accuracy much that is taught by authentic zoology and the researches of science. It was imaginative, thrilling and heavily charged with suspense.

"Son of Kong" is none of these things. On the contrary, it betrays a willingness—in fact, a positive determination—to burlesque both its predecessor and itself that classifies it rather as comedy than as any serious attempt to engage mature or thoughtful interest.

Off to Slow Start.

An unnecessary amount of footage is devoted to the preliminary developments that prompt Robert Denham, the young scientific explorer; Capt. Englehorn, commander of the ship that bore him to the island of his epochal adventure with the 50-foot gorilla that met so sensational a death when shot from the mooring mast of the Empire State Building in New York by airplane fire, and one or two of their earlier associates to return to the island of King Kong in search of a vast treasure, of which they had been kept in ignorance on their former visit. Upward of two-thirds of the length of the picture is dedicated to events of no great dramatic interest or importance, culminating in a mutiny of the crew on the shores of the island and the landing of four men and a girl in quest of whatever may be there to be found.

The first thing they find is the little 12-foot son of the monster of their former visit. The son of Kong, at the moment, is mired in a bed of quicksand and slowly sinking to an agonizing death, from which they save him by pushing a tree down across the bog to supply leverage for his escape. Little Kong is forever grateful for this act of human kindness and elects himself the guardian angel of his benefactors from that hour forth.

Knows All the Holds.

In their behalf, he battles numerous papier-mache adversaries of imposing proportions. After they have bound up one of his wounds with linen, torn from the skirt of the strangely composed Hilda, there is no limit to which Kong, jr., will not go to manifest his devotion.

He rids their path of dinosaurs, mammoth bears and other weird beasts, all of his bouts with these formidable opponents being after the manner of the modern rasslin' game. Young Kong knows all the favorite holds of Jim Londos and the rest of the mat boys.

He also has a nice left hook, like Mr. Dempsey, and a precocious understanding of his white friends' needs that usually anticipates their requirements in the matter of protection, help over the rough spots in the trail and neighborly counsel.

He even goes so far, at last, as to tear out the side of a huge vault, disclosing to their startled vision the treasure of which they have been in search. That's gratitude, if I ever saw it!

Convulsion of Nature.

But just then is when the cloudburst breaks and the earthquake comes. The earth is shaken, crumpled and torn by a vast convulsion of nature. The renegade guide who fostered the mutiny has paid with his life for his perfidy, but Hilda, Capt. Englehorn and the Chinese cook make the boat, only to realize that Denham is missing. They spy him finally, held high above the hood in the hairy paw of Master Kong, who drowns heroically that his queer little friend may live!

Robert Armstrong, Frank Reicher, Victor Wong and Noble Johnson appear in their original roles of Denham, Englehorn, the cook and the native island chieftain, and do as well as could be expected with the material at their disposal.

Helen Succeeds Fay.

Helen Mack succeeds Fay Wray as the heroine of the piece and does much to add to Miss Wray's stature as an actress.

The supplementary attractions include a new issue of the Paramount Sound News, featuring this week's president of Cuba; a "Loony Tunes" cartoon comedy, "Buddy, the Gob," and a Walter Catlett-Eddie Gribbon comedy, "Gold Nuggets," that, strangely enough, has nothing to do with the Nation's new monetary policies, but is moderately funny in spite of the handicap.

Lederer Makes Debut as Star

Beginning tomorrow, RKO-Keith's will present Francis Lederer, the romantic Czech actor, in his screen debut, "Man of Two Worlds."

Lederer has scored in this first picture just as he did on the legitimate stage both in Europe and in New York City. On Broadway, his successful appearance in "Autumn Crocus" is dramatic history and resulted in his contract with RKO-Radio Pictures.

Incidentally, executives of that producing company are predicting great things for Lederer and placing him in the same class as their other discovery—Katharine Hepburn.

In "Man of Two Worlds," Elissa Landi appears in support of Mr. Lederer, with the remainder of the cast made up of such well-known screen and stage players as Henry Stephenson, J. Farrell MacDonald, Walter Byron, Ivan Simpson, Lumsden Hare and Sarah Padden.

El Brendel Is Star of Farce

El Brendel will occasion loud and lusty laughs for patrons of Loew's Columbia Theater with his latest picture, "Olsen's Big Moment," which starts a weeks run tomorrow.

Walter Catlett has the leading role in support of this Scandinavian comic, who in this film has his most recent starring role. The supporting cast, in addition to a generous supply of hand-picked beauties, includes Barbara Weeks, Susan Fleming, John Arledge, Joseph Saurs and Edward Pauley.

Brendel is pictured as a janitor in a swanky apartment house who finds difficulty in getting away on his night off. In the same building a society matron is endeavoring to cajole her debutante daughter into marrying Walter Catlett, a wealthy but not romantic bachelor. But the daughter balks, saying she loves another. Brendel, unfortunately, is drawn into patching this romance up, and in his efforts to do the right thing he becomes involved in a succession of farcical experiences.

Paramount News features, a comedy and short subjects are added.

Traverses the Whole Country

A "Grand Hotel" on wheels describes the action of "Cross Country Cruise," Lew Ayres' new starring screen production which opens at the Rialto Theater today.

The film's plot concerns the interlaced destinies of a group of passengers on a transcontinental bus that operates between New York and San Francisco. The locale of the screen feature is the vast expanse of America's ribbon-like highways, the teeming cities that border the transcontinental route and the scenic points that dot the ever-changing landscape.

Stanley Rauh and Elmer Harris wrote the story, which was faultlessly directed by Edward Buzzell, with a supporting cast that includes June Knight, Alice White, Alan Dinehart, Minna Gombell, Robert McWade, Eugene Pallette, Henry Armetta, Jean Fenwick and Peggy Terry.

The Rialto accompanies this unusual film with an array of shorter and carefully selected novelties, together with the newest Universal News, with Graham McNamee as the talking reporter.

A Lively Film Play and Band

The week beginning tomorrow will bring stellar attractions to Warner Bros. Earle Theater, with Duke Ellington, his famous orchestra and a large group of entertainers heading the stage bill, and "Easy to Love," a lively comedy-drama, on the screen.

"Easy to Love," a Warner Bros. picture, is an exposition of marital mix-ups, dished out in hilarious vein.

The picture has an exceptionally strong all-star cast headed by Genevieve Tobin in the role of neglected wife, with Adolphe Menjou playing opposite her as the philandering husband. Mary Astor and Edward Everett Horton have the roles of the other woman and man, and Patricia Ellis and Paul Kaye are the younger players.

Duke Ellington and his famous orchestra, whose playing at the Cotton Club in Harlem, New York, won them the title of the "hottest band on earth," will be headliners of the stage show. Made popular by radio, Duke and his musicians have created a sensation in theaters and ballrooms from coast to coast. The distinct Ellington brand of music is familiar to almost every radio owner.

Falls, Reading and Boyce, in "Versatile Doings" will complete the stage bill.

Will Rogers in Travel Comedy

Will Rogers comes to Loew's Fox Theater tomorrow as "Mr. Skitch," a wholesome, laugh-studded comedy that gives life to the delightful persons in Anne Cameron's Saturday Evening Post story, "Green Dice."

ZaSu Pitts, as his troubled wife; Florence Desmond, clever mimic; Harry Green, dialect comedian; Eugene Pallette, the robust comic; Rochelle Hudson and Charles Starrett are the talented members of the cast that supports the cowboy humorist.

J. Harold Murray, singing star of the stage, screen and the airwaves, headlines a gala program of vaudeville.

A special added attraction is that international maestro, Alex Hyde, and his Musical Darlings, a noteworthy orchestral unit featuring Ruth Brent and the Four Rhythm Queens.

Bob Hope, noted stage comedy headliner, will present Lew Parker and company, a diverting humor presentation. The bill is rounded out with the comedy offerings of the Dodge Brothers Revue.

"Mr. Skitch" tells the story of Rogers, the head of a family of six who suddenly finds himself penniless. He places his brood in an old dilapidated car and starts toward California where he hopes to secure a job in another community.

As Revised by Ben and Ernst

Deftly dealing with a subject that is new to the screen, and one that is brilliantly handled by Hollywood's directorial genius, Ernst Lubitsch, from a script by Ben Hecht, the pictorial version of Noel Coward's "Design For Living" comes to the screen at Loew's Palace tomorrow.

It has for its leading players Frederic March, Miriam Hopkins and Gary Cooper. Edward Everett Horton is given a prominent and highly entertaining role in support of these three stars.

"Design For Living" concerns itself with the story of a girl who loves two men completely and at the same time. It is the brilliant and novel tale of Gilda who meets two young Americans on a Paris-bound train. She falls in love with both men who have been boon companions for years. They return her love but fear that it will dissolve their friendship. Both men become successful and to save their friendship Gilda returns to America.

"Shanghai Mickey," a Walt Disney Mickey Mouse cartoon, Hearst's Metrotone News, travel cartoon and short subjects are added.

Board's Status After Quitting Halts Job Work

Fredericksburg Tangle Up to Richmond; Orange Asks $6,000.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Spotsylvania County reemployment machinery has ceased to function pending determination by George W. Guy, State reemployment director, of the status of the Spotsylvania reemployment committee.

The entire committee personnel resigned Wednesday, following insistence of Miss Adele Clarke, field agent of Mr. Guy's office, that Scot Perry, one of the members, withdraw because of "antagonism to organized labor."

E. R. Carner, Commonwealth's Attorney, the committee chairman, and W. R. Linthicum, county agricultural agent, and Mr. Perry, who comprise the committee, refuse to act officially until the completion of Mr. Guy's investigation. Mr. Guy refused to accept the resignations of the three men, stating Miss Clarke had no authority to ask for Mr. Perry's resignation.

Receipt of $7,500 from the Civil Works supervisor of purchases in Richmond yesterday to enable this district to continue work on projects through tomorrow was announced by Ray C. Hopkins, CWA administrator of District 3.

Another sum for continuing the work is expected tomorrow. Small gangs are maintaining activity on projects which would have been pushed much faster had not the employment curtailment order been passed, Administrator Hopkins announced.

Fauquier Survey Gains.

Warrenton, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—The Federal Farm Housing Survey for Fauquier County has been progressing under Miss Selina H. Hindle, chairman, and J. H. Lillard, jr., vice chairman.

Conducted to "give the Department of Agriculture an indication of the most immediate needs in farm houses," the survey has been carried out by the following field agents: Mrs. Shirley Ashby, Mrs. Lawrence Brent, Mrs. Roderick Daffan, Mrs. Adelia Wingfield, Miss Cecily Brown, Mrs. W. C. Stribling, Mrs. Edward Marshall, Miss Amy Beane, Mrs. Grace M. S. Walker, Mrs. Lillian Ricketts and Mrs. Bessie Hart Smith.

Orange Seeks $6,000.

Orange, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—This city has applied for a PWA $6,000 grant for an addition to the high school, which will cost $20,000. The balance would be furnished by the town.

Winchester Gets Fund.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.) CWA projects were resumed here today after Frank W. Bailey, CWA administrator, received word from Richmond that the appropriation necessary for completing the work had been approved. This means the city will receive the full amount of its first application. The work resumed is on the Town Run diversion and improvements of the Millwood and Berryville avenue approaches.

Workmen also are painting the interior of the Handley Library. If any man-hours are left over here they will be used for repairs at George Washington's headquarters.

CWA Curbs Curtailed.

Richmond, Jan. 25 (AP).—Instructions authorizing the increase in the work week from 15 to 24 hours of all CWA employes engaged on projects within any county "predominantly urban in character" have been received by State CWA officials from Federal Administrator Harry L. Hopkins.

Officials said the immediate effect of this loosening of the original restrictions will be to put workers engaged on county projects in the immediate vicinity of cities on the same basis as those working inside city limits.

Much Work Needed.

Bristol, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—CWA Administrator Fox Drinkard said today there would be no difficulty in getting together a long list of projects, as requested by Ben F. Parrott, of Roanoke, regional head of CWA work, on the probability that the program would be extended.

All CCC camps on the Unaka National Forest Reserves now have full enrollments except Speedwell. Most youths are from Carroll, Grayson, Wythe, Smyth and Washington Counties in Virginia, and northeast Tennessee.

Luray Work Suspended.

Luray, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—With streets gutted, pipeline ditches on the sides and in the middle of them gaping chasms, guarded at night by red-globed lanterns, CWA work in Luray is at its most acute stage. Orders cutting working hours from 30 to 15 per week have spread consternation here and suspended purchase of CWA supplies.

Mechanics street has been rendered almost impassable. An open ditch awaits a water pipe, bought by the council, which has no money for labor.

Home, Antiques Worth $5,000 Burn

Historic Stafford House of Widow Destroyed.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Fire destroyed the historic home of Mrs. E. F. Gordon, of Mountain View, Stafford County, with a loss of $5,000, not covered by insurance. Antiques destroyed were valued at $1,000.

Mrs. Gordon, widow of Dr. W. W. Gordon, of Richmond, lived in the house with her daughter, Mrs. Bessie Briggs, and granddaughters, the Misses Helen and Margaret Briggs.

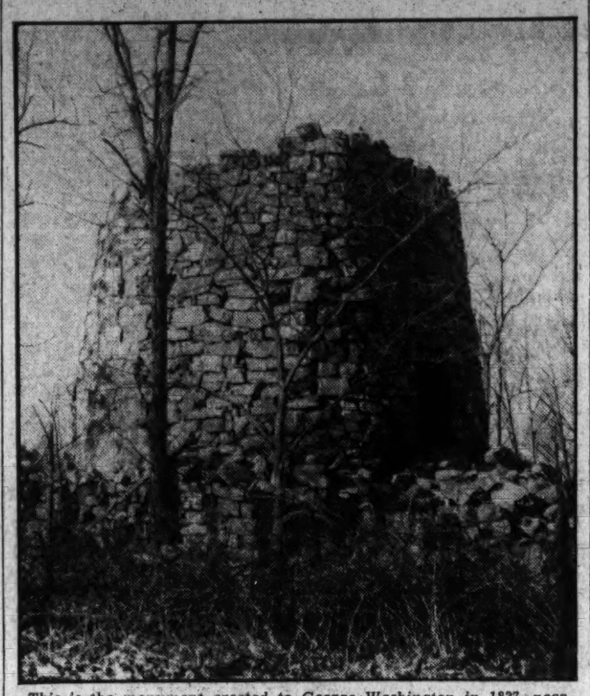
Old Washington Monument Goes to State for Restoration



This is the monument erected to George Washington in 1827, near Boonsboro, Md., and believed the first erected to his memory. Recently the Washington County Historical Society deeded it to the State of Maryland, and the State Forestry Department plans to restore it. Citizens of Boonsboro donated 10 acres of land surrounding the monument for a park.

Boonsboro Citizens Donate Land for Marker Built in 1827.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—The Washington Monument and 10 acres of land surrounding it has been deeded to the State of Maryland and the monument, believed the first erected to Washington, will be restored. It is located on a mountain overlooking Boonsboro, and may be seen from the National highway.

The monument and one acre of land has been the property of the Washington County Historical Society, which last week announced it would be deeded to the State, while citizens of Boonsboro gave the 10 acres of land.

The monument was erected July 4, 1827, by citizens of Boonsboro. As history records it, a group of men met in the public square at Boonsboro that morning and under command of George I. Hardy marched to the Blue Rocks to erect the monument. The foundation had been laid the day before. At noon the Rev. Mr. Clingham, of Boonsboro, an aged survivor of the Revolutionary War, delivered an address.

The monument is 54 feet in circumference at its base and is composed of huge stones. A flight of steps ran through the pile to the summit. On the west side a marble slab was placed, with the inscription, "Erected to the memory of Washington, July 4, 1827, by citizens of Boonsborough." As this slab was placed three soldiers who had fought in the Revolutionary War ascended the monument and fired a salute.

Many years afterward, through the interest of Admiral Dahlgren's widow, whose summer home was in the pass just below the monument, it was restored and improved and an awning placed to shelter visitors from the sun as they sat on the summit.

The monument was rebuilt in 1882, through a movement originating with LaGrange Lodge of Odd Fellows, of Boonsboro. Since then, the top of the monument has collapsed.

Reward Increased For Missing Man

Virginian Disappears Near Start of Suit.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 25 (AP).—An additional $500 was added today to the reward offered for information on the whereabouts of W. T. Doosing, of Shawsville, banker and business man, missing since Monday last week. The additional reward was offered from an undisclosed source.

Since the disappearance of the banker it has been learned a suit for $10,000 or more is pending against Mr. Doosing in Montgomery County Circuit Court. The suit was scheduled for trial at the next February term of court.

The action grew out of an automobile mishap when Manley Chandler was injured by a truck owned by Doosing and driven by his son, James.

Princess Anne, Md., Jan. 25 (AP). The Somerset County Grand Jury brought its special session to a close late today without finding a true bill in the lynching of George Armwood, Negro.

It did report nine indictments, three of them in connection with murders in the county.

The three men indicted for murder were.

The other indictments were for less serious crimes.

With the failure to find sufficient evidence in the Armwood case, another chapter in the lynching came to a close. Armwood was taken from the Princess Anne Jail on the night of October 18 by a mob, hanged and later burned.

Blast Suits Filed.

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.). In addition to Federal and State charges against Eugene Nixon, as the result of an explosion last Wednesday in which two men were killed, two damage suits have been filed in Circuit Court here. Separate suits by titling have been instituted by the Cumberland Savings Bank and by Cecil J. Walker and Flossie Walker.

The home, wrecked by the blast in which Nixon's wife and daughter were also injured, was owned by Walker and his wife. The South End bank held a mortgage on the property, which was rented to Nixon.

Nixon was given a hearing yesterday before U. S. Commissioner Thomas J. Anderson on charges of having an unregistered still and a quantity of liquor on which no tax had been paid and was held in $1,500 bail. Police said they found a 50-gallon still and 15 five-gallon kegs of whisky in the wreckage of his home.

Blames "The Devil."

Winchester, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—"The devil must have gotten into my hands," explained Arthur Russell, 20, of Gainesboro, pleading guilty when arraigned before Justice Donald L. Weems and charged with a theft of hides here. A six-months jail sentence was suspended on condition he did not return to Winchester during that period.

Student Exonerated.

Marion, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Francis Hoge, Washington and Lee University student who drove an automobile that struck and killed George H. Miles here Monday night, was exonerated at a hearing before Magistrate H. C. Johnson. The magistrate ruled the accident was unavoidable.

Miles is survived by his widow, one daughter, Miss Helen Speer Miles, and two sons, George H., jr., and John Miles, of Marion.

Grand Jury Gets Theft.

Bristol, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Burley Brown, colored, was bound to the grand jury of corporation court on a charge of grand larcency at yesterday's session of local police court.

A mysterious "colored boy" figured prominently in Brown's explanation of why he was in possession of a diamond ring, alleged to have been stolen from the S. C. jewelry store, but he was unable to name the person who he said gave him the ring to sell.

Damages Awarded.

Keyser, W. Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Two verdicts totaling $3,305.15 were returned against Etta Fisher in favor of Charles Kesecker and Bessie Anderson in circuit court before Judge A. Jay Valentine here.

The two actions were based on the same auto accident, in which Kesecker and Miss Anderson claimed they were injured by a car operated by Miss Fisher in May, 1930.

The Kesecker case resulted in a verdict for $2,500. The Anderson case resulted in an award of $806.15.

Virginian Gets Veteran Post

Frank A. Cavedo Named Placement Officer for State.

Richmond, Jan. 25 (AP).—Appointment of Frank A. Cavedo, as veterans' placement representative for Virginia, is announced by Frank W. Persons, director of the United States Employment Service.

Cavedo is director of the War Service Bureau of the State Department of Welfare and State service officer of the American Legion.

At the same time, it was announced by Arthur W. James, Virginia commissioner of public welfare, that he had appointed Nelson Richards, of Winchester, to succeed Mr. Cavedo in the Department of Public Welfare. Richards has been Cavedo's special assistant for the last year.

The position to which Mr. Cavedo was appointed is created by action of the Federal Department of Labor in establishing in Virginia a veterans' placement bureau such as has been formed in other States under the Wagner-Peyser employment act passed by Congress last summer.

The new veterans' placement officer will have an office in Richmond and will devote his efforts to securing preferential employment of veterans throughout Virginia, as provided by the Wagner-Peyer act.

Husband Slays Wife in Arms Of 'Other Man'

Couple Surprised When Mate Unexpectedly Returns Home.

Baltimore, Jan. 25 (AP).—Asserting "everything went black" when he found a strange man in the bedroom with his wife, John Anderson was held by police today pending an investigation of the shooting last night of Mrs. Hilda Anderson.

Described by police as the owner of an automobile found near the Anderson home, Israel Riberkoff, walked into a police station early today. He was subjected to secret questioning.

Police Lieut. Elmer O'Grady announced, during the course of the questioning, that Riberkoff admitted he was at the Anderson home at the time of the shooting. An attorney heard Riberkoff questioned.

Mrs. Anderson was shot through the heart. Her husband surrendered quietly to two detectives summoned by neighbors.

"I shot her," the detectives quoted Anderson as saying. "I did it but I hope she isn't dead. I didn't mean to shoot her. I went into the room and when I saw them everything went black. I'm sorry I did it."

Anderson is alleged to have told officers, the man thrust Mrs. Anderson's body in front of him as Anderson fired. The other man fled, leaving a coat in the house.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.). Mrs. Hilda Anderson, killed by her husband in Baltimore today, was formerly Miss Hilda Littrell, a native of Fredericksburg.

She lived here until her marriage January 6, 1928. Mrs. Anderson, 23, is mother of a 5-year-old daughter, Margaret.

Old Ways

Oyster Shell Lime Used in Rebuilding Statehouse.

Leonardtown, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.). Mortar made from the lime of 1,000 bushels of burned oyster shells will be used in construction of the Memorial Statehouse at St. Marys City, in order to follow as nearly as possible the exact plan of the original building. Already 400 bushels of shells have been placed in a kiln and burned.

The custom of burning shells for lime to use on farms in this county has passed away, and only elderly persons remember when it was done.

Chamber Head Sees Trouble

Harriman Tells Baltimore Audience Jobless Must Be Given Work.

Baltimore, Jan. 25 (AP).—Henry I. Harriman, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, said today "we may well look with apprehension to the future" if those now receiving aid from the Government come to regard this assistance as permanent."

At the annual meeting of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, he said:

"As I see it, the problem is not whether this country can stand a debt of $31,000,000,000, or whether it can raise $10,000,000,000 in the next six months. The problem is whether the President's program is one which is designed and carried out to stimulate private business in the capital industries, so that the millions of men who are now out of work may receive employment and earn their living without the aid of the Government.

"If the present emergency program, with its huge public expenditures, is to end, as the President hopes, with the fiscal year '34-'35, and if we have a balanced budget in the succeeding year and soon thereafter begin to reduce our National indebtedness, the problem is simple.

"If, on the other hand, those who are now receiving the aid of the Government come to regard such assistance as permanent, and if our unemployed are not restored to work in private industry, then we may well look with apprehension to the future."

Club Charges Partisan Bias On CWA Posts

Maryland Democrats Feel Republicans Receive More Than Share.

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—The method of parceling out appointive CWA jobs in Allegany County has been condemned by the Cosmopolitan Democratic Club here, and a resolution has been addressed to the Democratic State central committee, Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, United States Senator Millard E. Tydings and Representative David J. Lewis, asking an investigation of alleged discrimination.

It is charged that fewer than 10 per cent of the appointees are Democrats; that of a total of 20 foremen and timekeepers, only four are registered as Democrats.

Another resolution passed opposes any member of the Democratic State central committee accepting an appointive office without first resigning from the committee.

The Cosmopolitan Club plans an aggressive campaign in Alleghany County and will urge nominations for every office. In the past the Democrats have let most county offices go by default because of the large Republican majority.

Virgil T. Wolford, appointed a judge of the Allegany County Orphans Court to fill a vacancy, has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination at the coming primary. R. V. Smith, Avirett avenue, has announced he would be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the House of Delegates.

Horses Vie for Court Interest With Bull That Damaged Car

Sales of Painted Racer and Another Figure in Day's "Menagerie Session."

Charles Town, W. Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—All three animal cases which have earned the current session of the Circuit Court here the title of "menagerie session," will be tried the same day, following postponement until spring of the case of F. H. Boyd against J. E. Fritz, originally scheduled for yesterday.

Two horses and a bull will figure prominently in Tuesday's session. Cases will involve "Hustle-over," so-called painted horse, whose ownership and whereabouts have formed the subject of much recent litigation; a bull purportedly struck by an automobile and whose owner is being sued for damages to the car, and a stallion, whose purchaser allegedly has refused to honor notes he gave for the animal.

The "painted horse" case will take the form of a contempt of court charge against Michael Krock and County Constable Merle E. Alger, alleged to have disposed of the race horse contrary to directions of the court. The court had previously awarded the animal to the Shenandoah Jockey Club, with which Klock had been involved in a suit.

Alice B. James is suing Adrian C. Billmyer for damages to her automobile when it struck a bull owned by Billmyer. The bull is alleged to have strayed onto the public highway after an automobile driven by a third party had broken down the fence which confined the animal.

Alleged failure of J. E. Fritz to meet notes issued in payment for a stallion purchased from F. H. Boyd is the subject of the third suit. Fritz claimed the horse was not as represented.

Both parties presented deeds in court purporting to be grants for the land and records of both deeds were filed in the office of the clerk of the court. Mrs. Breighner claimed her deed came from relatives, original owners of the land. Manning alleged that he purchased the land from another party who had bought it many years ago from a member of the Breighner family.

Ministers Attack Virginia Race Bill

Flay Pari-Mutuel Move as Blow at Morals.

Richmond, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Richmond Ministerial Union denounced the movement to legalize pari-mutuel betting on horse racing as "an effort to undermine the morals of the people of our State."

The Rev. W. S. Deyerle, pastor of Highland Park Methodist Church and spokesman for the union, also said the union opposes "any loosening of the Sunday laws" prohibiting movies and sports.

The ministers will be heard next Tuesday afternoon before the House committee on morals, Delegate Charles W. Crowder, of Richmond, chairman, announced.

Virginians Aim Law at Spooks

Richmond, Jan. 25 (Spl.).—A superstitious lawmaker today helped win a favorable report for a graveyard bill at a hearing of the House general laws committee.

After Delegate L. S. Finney Sage, author of the measure to prevent location of cemeteries within 200 feet of a residence, explained the bill, Delegate E. B. English, Richmond, urged committee support.

"I'd be afraid to go on my front porch if there was a graveyard across the road," English commented.

Nearly all of the owners of mountain farms are buying smaller and more easily cultivated tracts in the "flat lands" of Page County. The new farms are costing about 50 per cent less than the prices they are receiving for their mountain land.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—That if world peace is ever accomplished it will be due to a large extent to the philosophy of idealism exemplified by the Kiwanis Club and similar service organizations was yesterday asserted by Dr. Walter P. Binns, Baptist revivalist, addressing the Fredericksburg Kiwanis Club at Kenmore Tavern, to whom he criticised the "Moral Cynicism" portrayed by the characters of such novels as Sinclair Lewis' "Main Street" and "Elmer Gantry," the latter of which he charged with not presenting a real picture of the life of a minister.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—A resolution deploring calling of a primary for April 3 by the Democratic city committee to name councilmanic nominees has been adopted by the Republican city committee.

Indorsing a nonpartisan form of city government, the Republicans contended the Democrats broke faith with the taxpayers when the primary was instituted, and expressed the opinion "the acute financial distress of the taxpayers" makes selection of a nonpartisan council imperative.

Keys Cached

Recapture of Prisoner Brings Their Return.

Grafton, W. Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—When he slugged the jailer of the Taylor County Jail at Grafton, took his keys and fled, Clyde DeMoss, 26, was fair enough to save the keys.

After his recapture at Brunswick, Md., and return to the jail, DeMoss took Sheriff Lee Bennett to the place where he had concealed the keys.

DeMoss had wrapped them in an oiled rag so they wouldn't rust, placed them in a glass jar, sealed the jar and buried it at the foot of an old oak tree in woods near Grafton. Not only that, but he carved the initials "G. J. K." on the tree above the buried keys. This, he explained, stood for "Grafton Jail Keys."

Woman Postal Carrier Retires

Maryland Rural Employe Traveled 224,000 Miles in 30 Years.

Knoxville, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Miss Julia M. Shafer, of Knoxville, a rural mail carrier for 30 years, during which she traveled approximately 224,000 miles, has been retired by the Postoffice Department. She was the first rural woman mail carrier in the East.

She began her route in 1902 as a substitute for her father, the late Thomas K. Shafer, and every day delivered mail to patrons over 25 miles of mud roads in the southwestern section of the county. Until nine years ago she rode in a horse-drawn buggy. She said she used six horses before abandoning that mode of travel. With the advent of the automobile and good roads she was able to reduce her all-day journey by half.

Miss Shafer has seen seven links of improved highway added to her route since she began her work.

A part of her route passed over what is known as the "haunted" road, where she had difficulty with two of her horses at different times.

"The horses seemed to be seeing something not visible to me and I had to be careful to keep them from running away," she said.

On one occasion the animal she was driving started to rear and plunge and finally got away from the driver. The horse ran some distance and finally crashed into a gate at the entrance of the old Hightman farm. The buggy was not upset and Miss Shafer escaped injury.

With her retirement her route has been consolidated with the Weverton route, served by Clarence Miller, of Rohrersville. Knoxville is about 20 miles southeast of Frederick.

Condemnation Sought in Park

Virginia Commission Asks Action on Disputed Valley Land.

Front Royal, Va., Jan. 25 (AP).—The State Conservation and Development Commission's office here is seeking condemnation of all lands inside the Kelsey line of the Shenandoah National Park, which are now under arbitration.

Requests were forwarded to courts of eight counties within the area, asking condemnation between the dates of February 20 and 28. The commission intends to transfer to the Government a minimum of 160,000 acres.

The office here was confident that all arbitration cases and others to which exceptions have not been filed will be concluded by the first week in February.

Luray, Va., Jan. 25 (AP).—Judge A. C. Carson today asked the court here to permit him to enter an order removing part of the holdings of the Allegheny Iron & Ore Co. from the boundaries of the Shenandoah National Park.

Judge Carson said the State Conservation and Development Commission had reached an agreement with the company, which objected to the inclusion of certain lands.

Test Holes Sunk For Federal Dam

Borings Indicate Grafton, W. Va. Site Satisfactory.

Grafton, W. Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Test borings so far indicate the proposed $12,000,000 Federal flood-control dam in the Tygarts Valley River will be located immediately above Grafton.

Under the direction of Federal engineers, test holes are being made along three parallel lines across the river and valley about 250 feet above the Grafton city filtration plant. These have attained a depth of 85 to 125 feet and the rock strata so far has proved satisfactory.

Operations will be continued on this site unless the test holes disclose unsatisfactory strata, in which event tests will be made farther up the valley.

West Virginia Senate Kills Utilities Bill

Advocates Charge Interests Dictate to Legislature; Vote Is 16 to 12.

Charleston, W. V., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—After a general airing of the measure, in which some heated remarks were made, the State senate today killed a bill to equalize the rate making and tax assessment valuations of public utility properties in West Virginia. With two absentees, the vote stood, 16 to 12 on accepting a committee recommendation of rejection.

Charges by advocates of the measure that the senate was controlled by the utilities were answered by statements that "every senator has tried to find a fair solution of this situation."

Because doubt was entertained that the Legislature could amend a statute by resolution, the senate unanimously killed a house resolution extending the State gross income tax payments from January 31 to March 1.

Insurance Check Voted.

An investigation was ordered by the House into the question of the reasonableness of fire insurance rates and a resolution by Delegate G. C. Belknap (Democrat), of Braxton, also directed the State auditor as ex-officio State insurance commissioner to look into the necessity of rate reduction. Belknap said rates are higher in West Virginia than in other States. After clearing up a batch of local bills, the House adjourned until tomorrow morning. Included was final approval of a bill authorizing the Morgan County Board of Education to borrow PWA funds for school buildings.

The House today invited the West Virginia delegation in Congress to appear before a Democratic caucus February 6, to give views on a pending Congressional redistricting bill.

Kee Attacks Measure.

Representative John Kee, of the Fifth District, has attacked the measure, charging the counties were "parceled out" by four Representatives at a meeting in Clarksburg, "to which neither Representative Ramsey, of the First District, or myself, was invited." The shifting of 11 counties, he declared, "practically disfranchises the Democratic voters of the First District and imposes heavy burdens upon the Democrats of the Fifth."

The Senate passed finally a bill authorizing the State board of control to make contracts for borrowing PWA moneys for dormitories at State institutions.

Virginia Maps U. S. Fund Plan

Dr. Gaines Confers With Workers on Program.

Lexington, Va., Jan. 25 (AP).—Efforts to make Federal funds serve the greatest number of persons in the best possible way occupied several hours of conference here today, when State relief workers gathered at the office of Dr. Francis Pendleton Gaines, president of Washington and Lee University and chairman of the commission for emergency relief administration in Virginia.

Meeting with the Virginia executives was Miss Mary Lucas, of New York, supervisor of the Family Welfare Association of America.

From Richmond came William A. Smith, State administrator for the Emergency Relief Administration, and Miss Mary Woll, director of social service for the Relief Administration. Those present were guests of Dr. Gaines at luncheon.

The discussion today was for a district program for relief as distinguished from the Federal works program.

"We merely are trying to chart a course to insure success of our plans," Dr. Gaines said. "Our task is to endeavor to get the maximum results from the Federal funds at our disposal."

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
WITHOUT CALOMEL
And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go
If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.
For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.
If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.
It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.
But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1931 C.M. Co.

College Opens Bids for Unit of New Campus

Richmond, Jan. 25 (AP).—Bids were opened here today on the first group of new buildings at the College of William and Mary to be financed by $650,000, recently granted by the Public Works Administration.

A bid of $68,167 by the Peters Construction Co. of Norfolk was lowest, J. Binford Welford, architect, said. Second and third low bids were J. J. McDevitt, Charlotte, N. C., and J. F. Barbour, Roanoke.

Proposals on other units will be opened within three or four weeks. Award of contracts on the first unit will be made after the architects study the bids. The entire project is designed to give 312 men work for about nine months.

The city of Williamsburg was humming with other activity fostered through the PWA and workmen were being assembled today to begin the first municipal undertakings, erection of a new water tank and laying of several additional mains. Plans have been completed also for an extensive sanitary system to include an incinerator, sewage disposal plant and extensions to present sewer mains.

Bids for portions of this work will be taken February 6 and 7. The entire sanitary project will cost approximately $224,000 and is expected to give eight months' employment to 160 men.

Eucouraging interpretations were placed on the recent stop order of the Civil Works Administration when local Administrator H. H. McCanna was advised by State officials today he might keep approximately the same number of men on his pay roll for coming weeks by initiating new projects to absorb workers from completed jobs.

Rather than dismiss any of last week's 4,777 workers as the projects they are engaged upon are completed, they are now directed through the public employment office to new projects, Mr. McCanna explained. No new names may be added to the pay roll.

Twenty projects were approved today by CWA headquarters here. Nine were for projects in Richmond.

Others included Buckingham County, $16,657 for improvements to public cemeteries; Winchester, $13,582 for relocation and construction of Townrun, and Greene County, $4,421 for completion of a road project.

Rockingham County today applied to the PWA for $30,000 for additions to seven county schools. The entire program will aggregate approximately $100,000, it was said, the balance to be sought from the State literary fund.

Girl Also Gets Term in Clarksburg Court.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.). The Rev. W. F. McKain, 60, of Fairmont, former pastor of a church there and once pastor of a Methodist Episcopal Church at Salem, was convicted today before Magistrate Late B. Davisson here, of driving a car while intoxicated. He was sentenced to 90 days in jail and fined $75. His driving license was suspended for a year.

Miss Vivian Rosier, 23, was convicted of being the hit-and-run driver of a car that injured Miss Lena Sands, 21, of Clarksburg, last night. She was sentenced to six months in jail and fined $100.

The automobile, in which the two defendants were accused of alternately driving by Corpl. J. M. McGlothlin, of the State police, tore a fire plug from the pavement after striking another car. The city water board is holding it for damage payment.

No Interest?

Man Repays $10 Overcharge of 30 Years Ago.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.). For 31 years the conscience of a Freeport, Ill., merchant worried him because he had overcharged a patron.

Today a letter inclosing a $10 check was received from the merchant by Mrs. Virginia Martini, of Hagerstown, explaining that in 1902 he had overcharged her $10 when she purchased a buggy from him. Mrs. Martini recalled the transaction when she lived in Freeport, but did not know she had been overcharged.

The merchant had learned her address from a relative.

State Asylum Probe Ordered By Assembly

Charges of Overcrowding at Hospital Lead to Action.

Richmond, Jan. 25 (AP).—The General Assembly today ordered an investigation of conditions in the four State hospitals for the insane and the colony of epileptic and feebleminded.

A committee of three senators and four members of the House of Delegates will conduct the investigation, making a special study of housing conditions and the safety and sufficiency of buildings.

The investigation was recommended by Senator R. H. Gilliam, of Petersburg, who cited complaints of what were termed intolerable conditions owing to overcrowding. The executive council of the Medical Society of Virginia had charged that at the Eastern State Hospital at Williamsburg inmates were sleeping on floors and eating with their fingers because there are not enough attendants to supply the ordinary decencies of life.

The committee will report to current session of the Assembly. Institutions to be investigated are the Eastern State Hospital at Williamsburg, the Western State Hospital at Staunton and the Southwestern State Hospital at Marion for white insane, and the Central State Hospital at Petersburg for colored insane, as well as the colony for the epileptic and feeble-minded near Lynchburg.

$10,000 Blaze Wrecks Home Of Educator

Books and Art Objects Lost in Charlottesville Suburban Fire.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.). Valuable pottery and books were among the articles destroyed by a fire which wrecked the home occupied by Dr. A. D. Fraser, professor of archeology at the University of Virginia, here early today.

The loss in the building and that part of Dr. Fraser's belongings which could not be removed was estimated at $10,000. The house was owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Maury Combs, of Richmond.

The fire began in a clothes closet in a maid's room, apparently catching fire from a flue. Dr. Fraser was awakened by smoke and aroused other members of the household. When he reached a room where his son, Douglas, was sleeping, flames already had burned through the door.

By the time Charlottesville firemen could reach the residence at surburban Frys Springs, the roof was ablaze. The fire was the seventh major one in the Frys Spring neighborhood in recent weeks, and the County of Albermarle has been asked by the Charlottesville government to buy apparatus to combat fires just outside the city limits.

Always the finest tobaccos and only the center leaves are purchased for Lucky Strike cigarettes. We don't buy top leaves—because those are under-developed. And not the bottom leaves—because those are inferior in quality. The center leaves—for which farmers are paid higher prices—are the mildest leaves. And only center leaves are used in making Luckies—so round, so firm—free from loose ends. That's why every Lucky draws easily, burns evenly—and is always mild and smooth. Then, too—"It's toasted"—for throat protection—for finer taste.

Useless Executive Papers.

Of course, it may be only a coincidence that the chairman of the House Committee for the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers has resigned so soon after the rumpus about missing air mail files in the Postoffice Department. Representative Green is reported to have been assiduous in the performance of his duties. No doubt the strain upon his energy and his judgment has driven him to seek relief.

In these days of probes, investigations, charges, insinuation and innuendo the duty of destroying useless executive documents becomes both solemn and arduous. Who shall say what innocent-looking scribble may not furnish subject matter for a Congressional investigation some day? Naturally, Floor Leader Byrns is unable to find another Congressman who will accept the job. A new deal for so-called useless executive papers seems to be in order, for it is obvious that these documents can not be allowed just to pile up in multitudinous confusion. Indeed, a second CWA might be required to erect quarters to contain them all.

Some one has suggested that these documents be burned on the Mall after being publicly read to an assemblage of citizens. House criers could insist, if no protests were heard, that complainants "forever hold their peace," and then cast each document into the fire. But citizens' associations would certainly complain of the smoke nuisance. And there might even be those who would advocate that the currency is reaching the stage where it, too, should be cast on the pyre of "Useless Executive Papers."

Russian Trade Bans Lifted.

Secretary Morgenthau has removed the ban upon the receipt of gold of Soviet origin, revoked the provisions of the anti-dumping laws applied to the importation of Russian safety matches and vacated an order prohibiting the entry of Russian lumber and pulpwood from certain areas unless the importer can prove "by preponderance of evidence" that convict labor has not been employed in its production. This triple action by the Treasury chief is heartily to be commended.

The discriminatory restrictions, now happily removed, have only served to deprive the United States of Russian buying orders. Although the depression has forced the Soviet government to reduce sharply the total volume of its purchases abroad, the shrinkage of our exports to Russia would not have been so abnormally severe if we had been willing to permit Russia to pay for her purchases. With an embargo upon gold imports of Soviet origin dating from 1920, and with new and irritating obstacles constantly being devised to restrict or prevent the sale of Russian products in American markets, it is not surprising that our exports to that country have declined almost 90 per cent during a period of three years.

Representatives of the lumber industry succeeded in obtaining a modified embargo upon the admission of Soviet lumber and pulpwood after two abortive attempts to do so. Finally a ruling was issued on the basis of undisclosed evidence which Secretary Morgenthau now holds to be inconclusive. The anti-dumping duties applied to safety matches similarly are held to have been based on insufficient evidence.

Rescinding of these discriminatory orders, resulting from prejudiced or inaccurate testimony, is a necessary preliminary to the restoration of normal trading relations between the United States and Russia. With or without recognition, trade can not be carried on with a country whose gold is refused and whose goods are denied entry by resort to ingenious administrative devices of doubtful validity and more than doubtful justice.

Easy Jubilation.

Official jubilation over the size of subscriptions to the Treasury offerings of notes and certificates of indebtedness seems either a trifle forced or somewhat naive. Certainly the informed public is not thrilled by showings which contain no elements of surprise. It was generally taken for granted that the response to the Treasury's current offering would be generous. As it was composed of short-term issues, monetary uncertainty did not deter banks and institutional investors from purchasing.

With the banks weighed down with excess reserves, and with private investment openings virtually nonexistent, the Government naturally has easy sailing with its short-term issues. Their speedy absorption does not provide the slightest indication of the strength of the investment support that the country is prepared to give to the Administration's financing program. To test that, the Treasury would have to offer long-term bond issues for sale to the general public.

What is demonstrated by the success of Wednesday's offering is the lack of any justification for the intimations that such success would depend on prior passage of the gold reserve bill.

For The Senate.

As the Senate prepares to cast its momentous vote on the gold reserve bill it might profitably stop for a moment to consider one of its own earlier resolutions, adopted on May 17, 1920.

At that time the country was in the midst of a sharp inflationary period. Cotton was bringing over 40 cents a pound and the farm price of wheat was $2.50 a bushel. Buyers were on strike and men were parading in overalls to show they couldn't afford to buy wool suits. So the Senate resolved:

"That the Federal Reserve Board be directed to advise the Senate what steps it purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and consequent high prices."

The answer to that resolution, sent to the Senate by Governor W. P. G. Harding, makes interesting reading today. It told of the efforts made by the board to induce member banks to avoid undue expansion of loans and to keep their volume of outstanding credits within moderate bounds. It suggested to the Senate that "the borrowings of the Treasury have the same effect upon the general credit situation as those of other borrowers," and advised a policy of rigid economy which "would of necessity preclude unwise appropriations, such as the proposed soldiers' bonus." In times of prosperity, said the Reserve Board in effect, remember that depression may be just around the corner.

Just a few months after the adoption of this Senate resolution, coy prosperity had fled and inflation had given way to equally pronounced deflation. By the end of 1920 cotton had dropped to 15 cents a pound and wheat to $1.46 a bushel, with further sharp declines in store for 1921. The long-suffering Federal Reserve Board was being denounced as party to a deflationary conspiracy and plans were on foot to revive the War Finance Corporation to stem the falling prices of farm products.

The difference in the situation today is one of degree and not of kind. The Senate has no more knowledge of what the future has in store than it had in May of 1920. Then, however, it was content to ascertain what the Federal Reserve System was doing to meet an emergency which, unknown to the Senators, was on the verge of being transformed to an emergency of exactly opposite character. Today the Senate is preparing, with equal blindness as to the future, to take action which may easily make management of the rebound far more difficult. There can be no optimism over a surrender of controls established to check either kind of excess in economic movements.

Hasty And Unsympathetic.

The decision of the Senate Territories Committee to revive the discredited Hawes-Cutting law is a strange reply to the Filipino delegation which came to Washington to present a more satisfactory solution of the Philippine problem. The delegation submitted its report to President Roosevelt last week. Details of the Filipino plan have not yet been made public. Nor have they been transmitted to the Senate Territories Committee. Yet that group has undertaken to close the door to Philippine independence unless the insular legislature will accept the Hawes-Cutting measure, which it has already emphatically rejected.

A subcommittee was instructed to draw up a resolution extending until October the period in which the Hawes-Cutting act may be accepted. If this could have been interpreted as a move for reconsideration of the objectionable features of the act it would have met with hearty approval in the islands as well as in the United States. But Chairman Tydings dispelled any hopes of this character. No provisions of the act are to be modified, except the time limit. Yet Congress will be asked to coerce the Filipinos into accepting it.

"Therefore, it is the committee's desire," Senator Tydings said, "to give the Filipinos one more chance to accept or reject the Hawes-Cutting bill. If after the new elections the legislature again fails to take action or acts adversely under the provisions of the bill, it will be notice to Congress that the Filipinos do not desire independence and desire to continue under their present status."

It is evident that if the Filipinos should accept the act under this threat, and its operation should prove unsuccessful, the full responsibility for that failure would fall upon the United States. Leaders at Manila have repeatedly expressed fear that the islands could not survive as an independent nation under the terms of this law. Many students of the problem in this country have pointed out grave defects in the measure. Yet the Senate Committee on Territories attempt to force it upon the Filipinos without giving them a hearing.

The Filipino leaders have neglected to consider many practical aspects of the independence problem, but certainly that is no excuse for such arbitrary action on our part. It is difficult to believe that the Administration intends to dispose of this vital issue in so unsympathetic and indifferent a manner.

The Kingfish Hooked?

The defeat of Huey Long's candidate in the New Orleans mayoralty primary is significant, but not conclusive, evidence that the reign of the Louisiana chieftain approaches its end.

It must be remembered that Long fought the New Orleans "ring," as he called it, and that he never had its support until he became Governor. He whipped the New Orleans organization to its knees by withholding payment of the Crescent City's portion of a bond issue until it gave in, whereupon a great banquet was held celebrating the new alliance.

Naturally, when Long broke with the New Orleans crowd, he lost the support Walmsley's machine had given him. The fact that the New Orleans ring broke with him indicates that old enemies feel it is again safe to defy him. But it will be too early to predict the close of this unsavory chapter until a future election brings returns from upstate Louisiana. Long's strength, as he himself said, was always derived from the "hill billy boys."

Invective And Investigation.

It is pleasant to be able to note Gen. Johnson's decision to pay serious attention to constructive criticism. Senators Borah and Nye, along with many other observers, have been pointing out that the NRA is encouraging monopolistic tendencies, thus putting small manufacturers and business men at a disadvantage. In his New York address last week Gen. Johnson denied these allegations with a vigorous use of billingsgate. Yet he is now willing to appoint a board of prominent citizens to which "the little men" of the business and industrial world may take their complaints.

This is the third concession which the Administration has made in this field since criticism began to be voiced on Capitol Hill. President Roosevelt issued an order providing that individuals who are dissatisfied with rulings of the NRA may press their cases before the Federal Trade Commission or the Department of Justice. Then Gen. Johnson appointed A. D. Whiteside as a special assistant on credit and finance, and assigned him the duty of looking after the needs of "smaller business where the difficulty of obtaining credit may be one of the severest handicaps in competing with larger enterprises." Now comes the board proposal.

There is no assurance, of course, that any of these adjustments will arrest the development of alleged monopolistic tendencies under the codes. But they manifest a commendable responsiveness to thoughtful criticism. In this respect the course followed by Gen. Johnson is much more satisfactory than his fulminations in New York last week. The ceaseless and heroic efforts of the NRA chieftain to improve its policies would be more readily appreciated if he were not so prone to denounce those who have useful advice to offer. The same may be said of Harry Hopkins, who no longer dismisses as "yapping" the observations of those who weeks ago tried to tell him that all was not well with the CWA.

Gangsters' Paradise.

No writer of lurid fiction has ever imagined a more fantastic story than the one uncovered by Commissioner of Correction Austin H. McCormick in New York. With a picked squad of detectives and deputy prison wardens, Mr. McCormick descended Wednesday upon Welfare Island, New York City's prison, arrested the deputy warden, stripped the warden of power, and began a wholesale clean-up.

The commissioner found two gangsters in virtual control of the place: Joseph Rao, famed beer racketeer, in charge of an "Italian Mob," and Edward Cleary, an ex-convict, in charge of the "Irish Mob." The two, with their henchmen, had taken over two wards of the hospital, ousted the patients, and installed themselves in sybaritic luxury.

The two bosses had valets who shined their shoes, cooked their meals and waited on them hand and foot. Both the bosses owned pigeon cotes at the prison. Rao had 200 pigeons housed in a special cote built on the grounds outside of the main building. He and Cleary used them to fly dope into the prison, to sell to the inmates. Prisoners who could not pay in money paid in food they had stolen. Of 1,700 prisoners only about 1,200 ever troubled to go to the mess hall. The others were satellites of the gangsters and were served in their cells or cooked stolen stuff. They had burned more than 1,000 volumes out of the library to prepare their meals. Unmentionable vice was rampant. Rao had built himself a small park which he and a few favorites alone were permitted to visit. He apparently sold passes for his favored fellow convicts to visit the rest of the island and he was free to roam around at night.

The condition had been reported as far back as last August, according to Harry Shulman, formerly aid to Prof. Raymond Moley in the research work of the New York Crime Commission. He said that Welfare Island was cankered by "crime and depravity almost beyond the ability of the imagination to grasp." Mayor LaGuardia said it was only typical of conditions he inherited from the Tammany administration.

Is it too much to hope that New York will remember the Welfare Island story when Tammany seeks to get back into power?

A Parade of the Past From the Files of The Post.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

ADMIRAL FLETCHER, in command of the American fleet in Mexican waters, was said by The Post's correspondent to have received orders to land Marines and seize the road from Vera Cruz to Mexico City when Huerta quit office.

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION accepted an offer by Lincoln Beachy to prove that Prof. Langley's airplane was the first capable of flight. Beachy contended the plane was all right and only needed a little better motor.

TEN YEARS AGO TODAY.

WITHIN 24 HOURS after E. L. Doheny testified that he had lent Albert B. Fall, former Secretary of the Interior, $100,000, J. W. Zevely, attorney for Harry F. Sinclair, who was in Paris, testified that his client lent the Cabinet officer $25,000 three months after he left office.

WILLIAM H. ANDERSON, superintendent of the Antisaloon League of New York, said a mysterious person whom he knew only as "John T. King," had given him the $25,000 which he claimed he had lent the league. He was on trial for forgery in connection with the money.

The Library Articles.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to tell you how much I appreciate what The Post is doing for the Public Library in running its series of articles on the library by Mr. Felix Bruner, and by your excellent editorial on Monday, January 15. Not only do I appreciate your support, but a number of members of the board of library trustees have spoken to me in terms of approbation; other friends of the library have also expressed their satisfaction that The Post was interesting itself in the library so helpfully.

Perhaps it should be pointed out that although the Public Library was neglected by Congress in its earlier years, during the last few years the attitude of the Appropriations and District Committees has been distinctly helpful, and that by means of such better support the library has latterly been making more rapid progress than during the earlier years of its history. Were it not for the depression which has slowed up almost every enterprise, including the library, I think that by this time we would have in operation at least the Georgetown branch, and perhaps also the Petworth branch, both of which are being so urgently pressed by the people of those neighborhoods.

The Monetary Situation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I submit to you my opinions in regard to the monetary acts that have been instituted in the past few months and also of those acts that are now in the balance, designed to aid National recovery.

To begin with, the Administration voted our President $3,500,000,000 to promote recovery. This sum in itself is almost insignificant compared to our national wealth but it has the reverse action in that the people have to pay for it, and at the rate past obligations of a like nature were taken care of the taxpayer and citizen will pay for it many times over before it is wiped off the books.

Tracing the history of money back to its origin in the United States we learn that article 8 of the Constitution provided for the coinage of money at the direction of Congress, then a little later we learn that the then Secretary of the Treasury aided a group of his friends to obtain a banking charter and at the same time they were granted permission or the right to use United States money free to carry out their enterprise. The failure of this group is banking history but it will serve to show how the people's rights were disregarded. This was the beginning of the era of debt burden from which the taxpayer can never hope to free himself under existing laws.

Congress has absolute power over currency, credit and banking in the United States and, therefore, is capable of bringing to an end this deplorable condition that has taken such a toll from our people the last four years.

I contend that the solution lies in balancing mass production with mass purchasing power and this can be brought about without money cost to the taxpayer or the Government by a single act of Congress, which would restore the use of currency or money free to the people.

I have definite information on this subject and will be glad to discuss it with readers of The Post either through the columns of this splendid paper or direct contact.

JOSEPH BRENNAN.

Neither Pro-English; Pro-Irish; Pro-Nonsense.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Is The Post an American or an English newspaper?

Your editorial in this morning's issue sneering at Senator Lewis for his defense of American rights in the St. Lawrence waterways treaty is so singularly pro-English that I am driven to ask you categorically a question that has long beset me.

For example, your strange attitude toward the present situation in Ireland. Apparently you are strongly opposed to the establishment of an Irish republic. Surely, no American can take such a position. Every American that is worthy of the name would rejoice to see the end of English rule in Ireland. You seem to be in favor of continuing it.

I think you owe to your readers some clarification of this puzzle. The overwhelming majority of your readers are Americans, not Englishmen.

WILLIS J. RUTLEDGE.

Rural Mail Service.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If our Congressman wants the gratitude, love, good will and influence of us rural voters, let him protect our rural service. It is the greatest necessity rural communities have. We look forward each day to the arrival of our carrier, with news from all over the world. If we didn't have rural service there would be days, maybe weeks, when we would have no news from anywhere. He also brings us letters from absent loved ones each day, when it might be months or years if we had to go to the postoffice for them. We can order groceries, clothing, machinery—everything in fact—when it is too bad to go anywhere and have them carried to the door, because the weather never gets too bad for our smiling mail carrier. If we have sickness we can have our doctor send medicine when necessary for far less expense than a trip after it.

To some of us our mail carrier is seemingly of more importance than Congressman, Governor or President. We need them all. If the Government tries to economize by stopping rural service, it will be expensive economy, and there will be hundreds of dollars less money taken in by the Government for postage, to say nothing of the loss and inconvenience suffered by the rural populace, who have so few conveniences and are so thankful to their Government officials for the rural service. I want my Congressman to do all in his power to protect our rural service.

For Vaudeville Reform.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There has been a great deal of discussion lately on the advisability of cleaning up the alley situation in Washington, and it would seem that while we are about the task of removing such disgraceful phases of indifference to public sanitation we might also make an effort to clean up the vaudeville situation as it exists today in our most representative motion-picture theaters. It is impossible to go into one of these to see any first-class moving picture, and not be disgusted with the crude vulgarity of many of the "gags" and "wisecracks" one must be subjected to during the vaudeville part of the performance: To tolerate such conditions in supposedly reputable theaters is quite as dangerous a menace to public taste as the alley is dangerous to public health.

Public opinion—in a great measure through the medium of fan mail—keeps the radio program comparatively free from this type of vulgarity. It would seem to be in order for the community to use the same means by which to let the managers of moving-picture theaters know how often their programs disgust decent people.

JULIA C. KENLY.

Pity the Pedestrian!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In all the propaganda for parks in the Washington metropolitan district it occurs to me that the "forgotten man" is the pedestrian. On the Mall provision is being made for two roadways, where, doubtless, cars will run wild as they do on the Mount Vernon highway. There is no provision on that highway for the pedestrian; only automobiles have been provided for.

There is no pathway for the pedestrian on the beautiful roadway to Great Falls on the Maryland side. The pedestrian must use the roadway where one's life is always in danger. Many years ago hikers found much pleasure in "tramping" to Great Falls over the road. Today they dare not attempt it. A pathway should be built along that road.

Of all the recommendations made within the last few years for "more roadways," the one to fill up the Potomac Canal and make a scenic automobile highway out of it, is the most undesirable. I suggest that the canal be reconditioned for the pleasure and convenience of pedestrians only.

There is no other "scenic highway" in this vicinity where the pedestrian can get away from the sight, noise, smell and danger of the automobile.

GROVER AYERS.

There Wasn't Any Surplus When Man Cut His Grain With a Sickle

By Robert Quillen.

The harm done by a criminal does not end with the crime. That is only the beginning.

He must be caught and tried, and those who have done no wrong must bear the cost.

Once convicted, he must be housed and clothed and fed by those he has wronged.

But that is not the end. Criminals in State and Federal prisons manufacture goods in enormous quantities which are sold in competition with the work of honest men.

The market value of these prison products runs as high as $100,000,000 a year.

No one questions the wisdom of giving prisoners something to do. To keep them idle in their cells would be cruel.

But what can be done with them? Whether they manufacture goods in prison or work in chains on the public highways or serve as slaves of a private contractor who hires them from the State and fattens on their misery, they still compete with free men who need jobs.

There is but one solution. If they must work and yet must not compete with law-abiding men, they must produce what they need and nothing more.

Let them live on farms as the pioneers did. Let them grow their food and can supplies for winter; raise their meat and kill and cure it; raise cotton or sheep and card and spin and weave their cloth and then make their clothes; tan leather and make their shoes; cut timber and make their furniture; dig clay and make their pottery and brick for their buildings.

Our forefathers lived that way and developed sound characters. It is a wholesome way to live, and the only way prisoners can live without burdening or harming other men.

Along the Potomac

With
Carlisle Bargeron

IF, as the experts say, the pending monetary bill is one of the most important pieces of legislation since the Civil War, the impression that will remain longest with those who have observed Congress considering it will be that of Carter Glass, the only man, perhaps, in the Congress who understands the subject at hand, but whose influence has come to be nil.

BARGERON.

The picture of him in the Senate on Wednesday is not easily erased from the mind. He was a tired man resigned to his fate, the structure that he designed and fostered nearly all of his public life, the Federal Reserve System, about to be pulled down around him. The members of his party who used to run to get him every time a money fight came up, who listened attentively to his every word and abided by his advice, sat around him again; but this time not to have him interpret and explain money to them, but to harass, to snipe, to outshout his feeble voice.

I imagine it was sort of the way mobs used to do dethroned rulers in the past, dance around and shout and finally chop off the victim's neck.

How things have changed! How, insofar as the Senator is concerned, they have changed in recent months. There was a time in the campaign, when the Democrats were seeking office, when they sought out the Senator, pleaded with him to offset the Republicans' charges that they were money tamperers. And what a masterpiece of a speech they thought the Senator made when he finally left a sick bed and went on the air.

Newspapermen with Mr. Roosevelt at the time said he talked about it for three days, remarking time and again that it was a classic.

* * * * *

They don't want to hear him talk now, though—those Democrats. Not in the least. They try to keep him off his feet by appearing solicitous about his health. And then when he does get to his feet they seek to undermine him, such monetary experts as Robinson and Barkley, whose studies or dealings in finance have never been such as to attract attention heretofore.

The difference between Glass and the others, of course, is that he has principles and convictions, that he wanted the Democrats to come into power because he thought they would carry out those principles and convictions, while the others wanted their party in power because of the greater prominence and influence it gave them.

* * * * *

Yet he didn't complain as the sniping came from his former colleagues. He didn't even respond feelingly to them. There was about him the air of utter futility of trying to do anything. There was a question sometimes of whether he would even try to respond to the silly propositions propounded by his colleagues.

There had come over him, in fact, a strange restraint, a restraint of speech and feeling that have not in the past been associated with him. It was as if he didn't really care what the Senate did with the bill or with the reserve structure, whose purpose and whose faults during the years of its operations, he has known better than any one else.

What a sight to behold! Experience and mature judgment lying down uncomplainingly to enthusiastic and untried youth, even moderating his resistance for fear, apparently, of making monkeys of them. Because I believe if he were to let loose he could do just that.

If any one wanted, in a few words, the story of the so-called revolution, the story of daring and experimentation, of ruthlessness, riding roughshod over conservatism, experience and tradition, the story of Carter Glass and the monetary bill should suffice. It is the story, too, of order versus disorder, with the latter reigning supreme.

Portugal.

There are certain cities which, when seen only on the map, pull us with a force that is hard to resist. The great city of Lisbon in the small country of Portugal always had this effect on me. Its situation in the southwestern corner of Europe, its history, and its magnificent harbor, have always appealed to me. It is remarkable in having had one of the most terrific earthquakes in the history of mankind, in 1755, and in never having had one since. Is it saving up for the bicentennial? The great English novelist, Henry Fielding went there to die, and with his usual ill luck, died just one year before the earthquake, thus missing what would have been a spectacular exit. His grave is in a beautiful spot in the Lisbon cemetery.

The greatest living scholar on the Portuguese language and literature is Prof. Henry R. Lang, of Yale. His writings are authoritative.

The most attractive book for the general reader and for those who hope to spend some time in Lisbon and its surroundings, is "Portugal for Two," by our American wit, humorist, and man of letters, Lawton Mackall. I recommend this book to everyone who is interested in this historic land; and to those who plan to see it, this book is indispensable. The solid meat of its information is salted with delightful humor.

No End of Books

The Sprig-Tibe Has Cub.

I put my head out of the window just now to snatch a share in so balmy an afternoon, and the first thing I heard was the sound of two sneezes, two very redoubtable sneezes, echoing in the street below. That was quite enough, a fair and honest warning from fate. It took me not three seconds to turn around and rap knuckles upon wood. For much as I relish a fine, bright day in January, I have no desire to find my verbal praises of the weather limited to the diction of the sufferers from acute coryza. No one can say, with any joy in the matter, that "the sprigtibe has cub."

The common cold in the head is surely the most familiar and all but the most mysterious disease known to man. No scientist can tell you for a surety what causes it. No doctor can cure it definitely and without equivocation. As true today as when first spoken is the ancient medical quip: "An untreated cold lasts 14 days, while a treated cold can be cured in a fortnight."

• • • •

Some time back the editors of Fortune printed an article on the subject, which has now been made into a little book: "Our Common Enemy: Colds" (McBride, $1). With that informative and amusing candor peculiar to the magazines, Fortune and Time, they have gathered and set down just about all that is known of the causes and cures of colds. The medical facts come from the most eminent physicians and bacteriologists. The data about the advertised preparations is the result of irreverent researches into business history. You will find it as interesting to read about the efforts made toward a vaccine against colds as it is entertaining to hear of the rather simple ingredients of our most famous nostrums, and the men who have made millions out of them.

• • • •

The central mystery of colds by no means implies that nothing is known on the subject. Vast data have been gathered, and a few tendencies may be mentioned. Most people have two or three colds a year. A cold is the same ailment in Alabama or Labrador or anywhere else in the world. Some people are markedly more susceptible than others, but men and women are equally susceptible. Occupation makes a difference, and so does race. Sudden changes in the weather are of great effect. But nothing, one way or another, can be traced to smoking, sleeping eight hours a day, taking cold baths, or wearing rubbers. An odd fact, however, is known about exercise and the wearing of woolen underwear—that those who wear little underwear and take but scant exercise have the fewest colds.

As to cures, headway has been made in the search for a vaccine, and something can be said for ultra-violet rays, chlorine gas, and controlled diet. But the surest cure is the simplest. The editors asked Dr. Alphonse R. Dochez, a leading scientist who knows as much about colds as anybody, what he did for his own colds. "I stay home, in bed," he replied.

Shake Gently and Serve.

There is one time-honored recipe for a cold in the head which the learned editors of Fortune did not investigate, a compound known familiarly as a "Tom and Jerry." You will find it on page 282 of the best book in its field which I have seen. "The Official Mixer's Manual" (Long & Smith, $3), is the work of Patrick Gavin Duffy, former chief bartender of the old Ashland House in New York, a man who in his prime served the elder J. P. Morgan, Edwin Booth, E. H. Sothern, Jim Corbett, Oscar Wilde and even William Jennings Bryan—though that was but a pint of Apollinaris water. Moreover, he reputedly is the man who brought the first highball to America in 1895. Mr. Duffy, it is plain to see, stands as an authority on a subject of sudden importance.

• • • •

You will seldom come on a book which hews more to the line of its purpose. The cover will withstand everything from water to 140-proof Demerera rum. So will the pages. The book is in the form of ring-bound, loose-leaf ledger—pages may be added at will (indeed, the publishers inclose with each copy a postcard which, when returned to them, will bring the purchaser a year's issue of supplementary pages. For each of the various classes of drinks—cocktails, highballs, sours, punches, slings, flips, toddies and wines and beers—there is a projecting tab, so that the section may be found instantly. Four pages illustrate the varieties of glasses possible, and each recipe states the one to use.

It is a relief to come upon a book of recipes which has no room for distracting pictures and verses. The Spartan simplicity of the form is reflected in Mr. Duffy's soundly conservative tastes. He frowns upon incongruous mixtures, he inclines to stirring instead of shaking in the preparation of cocktails, every recipe he can not personally recommend he has marked with a special sign. Nothing could induce a better confidence.

• • • •

Unless you are a doctor of philosophy in the subject, you would never know there were so many kinds of drinks. Take cocktails. Mr. Duffy gives 228 pages of them, four and five recipes to the page. Of gin base alone there are some 500 recipes, and the bases range to such odd liquors as Calisaya, Fernet Branca and Kina Lillet.

One old friend I could not find, a drink invented in this very city by the grandfather of my college roommate—the "Major Bailey." It is nothing more complex than a mint julep made with gin, but it has its uses on a hot day.

Labor to Urge 'Owner-Union' Outlaw Action

Broader Powers Under NRA for Bargaining to Be Sought.

posed of equal representation of labor and employers in all branches of industry for the purpose of adjusting grievances which arise between employers and employes.

An amendment to Section 7A of the National Recovery Act which will provide adequate protection for all workers who organize into bona fide trade unions in the exercise of their right to organize, free from discharge, lock-out and discrimination on the part of management and employers.

An amendment which will prohibit corporations and employers from using their funds for the purpose of establishing, fostering, promoting and maintaining company unions.

An amendment which will provide that the National Labor Board and regional labor boards be clothed with authority to subpena witnesses, administer oaths and, when necessary, be accorded the right to examine books, records and financial reports pertaining to cases under consideration.

A provision vesting the Labor Board with mandatory powers to hold elections under its supervision, where the workers in an industry request such an election, shall be held or where the Labor Board deems it necessary that such an election shall be held in order to determine whom the workers wish to elect as representatives for the purpose of engaging in collective bargaining.

Wagner Approves Program.

Senator Wagner told the delegates that he approved their legislative program and promised to work for the amendments in Congress.

"Working hours are not short enough under the codes," Wagner said. "We should have begun with less than a 40-hour week. Now we have got to shorten those hours if we are going to absorb unemployment and give the laboring man the ordinary comforts of life. Hours must be shortened and wages must be increased."

Senator Wagner declared the Administration gold bill will increase commodity prices and there must be some provision for wages to keep pace with prices.

"If wages are not increased, the whole thing will fail and we will be thrown into another depression," he said. "Low wages were one of the causes of the depression. Wages have been out of all proportion to our national income.

"Greed is stepping in again. If we have another depression it will be the last one. Labor will not stand for another depression without changing our institutions and our social order."

Wagner declared that 70 per cent of the cases before his board have involved disputes over the right of workers to select their own representatives. The whole purpose of Section 7A of the recovery act is to put the worker on an equality in bargaining with the employer, he said.

Believes in Interference.

"I believe in Government interference," he said. "The Government must see to it that you are on an equal footing with your employer."

He said labor representatives must participate in the making of codes as well as in their administration.

Donald K. Richberg, counsel for NRA, told the labor leaders that Government wage fixing must not be substituted for collective bargaining. He warned against writing specific wage scales into the codes.

"Fixing of wages," he said, "opens the door to compulsory arbitration. I am opposed to political wage fixing or to putting into the hands of the Government power to fix wage scales or to control relations between employer and employe.

"This whole job is a great experiment," he said, referring to NRA. "We are trying about everything to see how it works. We are considering some fundamental changes in policies that haven't worked so well."

Teaching Jobs Supplied to 25 Through CWA

First of 80 Positions Assigned in Three Separate Fields.

Twenty-five special teachers were placed in temporary positions in three separate fields yesterday, Dr. LeRoy A. A. Halbert, director of emergency relief for the District, announced.

They are the first group out of a total of 80 for which work has been found. All were notified to take physical examinations and report for assignments which are expected to be made today.

Six blind instructors were included among the appointees. They will be assigned to teaching blind children regular phases of blind education, including reading of Braille, and will be under the direction of Dr. A. C. Copening, head of the Vocational Rehabilitation Bureau.

Eleven teachers were assigned to Assistant Superintendent of Education Robert Haycock for work in nursery schools and nursery centers. They will begin work as soon as possible.

Nine were attached to Dr. Stephen E. Kramer for educational work in adult classes, which now are being recruited.

Funds for the employment of these teachers come directly from the District Civil Works Service. The new instructors and the remaining 55 yet to be appointed will continue in their new jobs as long as the necessary funds are available.

("Among the places licensed to sell liquor and wines at retail in New York is a hat and haberdashery shop."—News item.)

Customer (who has been celebrating and is a little confused)—Can you take care of me?

Clerk—Yes, sir; what can I do for you?

Customer—I'm giving a little party to some friends tonight and I want to get some good hats.

Clerk—Any special brand?

Customer—What do you carry?

Clerk (a little mixed up, too)—Well, if you want a good hard hat we recommend the Golden Wedding. Old Parr and the Mount Vernon. In soft hats our Old Granddad and Shenandoah brands are very popular. How many did you want?

Customer—I thought I'd get four or five, but I might get a case if the price is right. No cut stuff, now.

Clerk—Not at all; you get every hat just as it comes from the warehouse.

Clerk—Exactly.

• • • •

Customer—Say, how are your neckties running?

Clerk—The last lot was the best we've had. Have you sampled our James E. Pepper ties?

Customer—I never cared much for Pepper ties. Got any Old Crows? Before prohibition I never wore anything but Old Crow neckties. A little strong, but very good.

Clerk—We expect 50 cases of Old Crow ties in this afternoon. Anything else, sir?

• • • •

Clerk—Shoes?

Customer—No. It's funny how it escaped my mind.

Clerk—Bathrobes? Slippers? Underwear?

Clerk—Gloves? Pajamas?

Customer—It begins with a "W."

Clerk—Waistcoats?

Customer—No. Lemme think hard. What was it?

Clerk—Whiskbrooms?

Customer—No, but you're getting warm...It's sumpin' like that... Ah, I remember now!

Clerk—What was it?

Customer—Whisky!

Clerk—Oh, yes. We carry a wonderful line of whiskys especially tailored to fit the fastidious dresser. Very smart and exclusive. What size whisky do you take?

Customer—I think it's seven and a half.

Clerk—Right this way.

Customer—Yesshir.

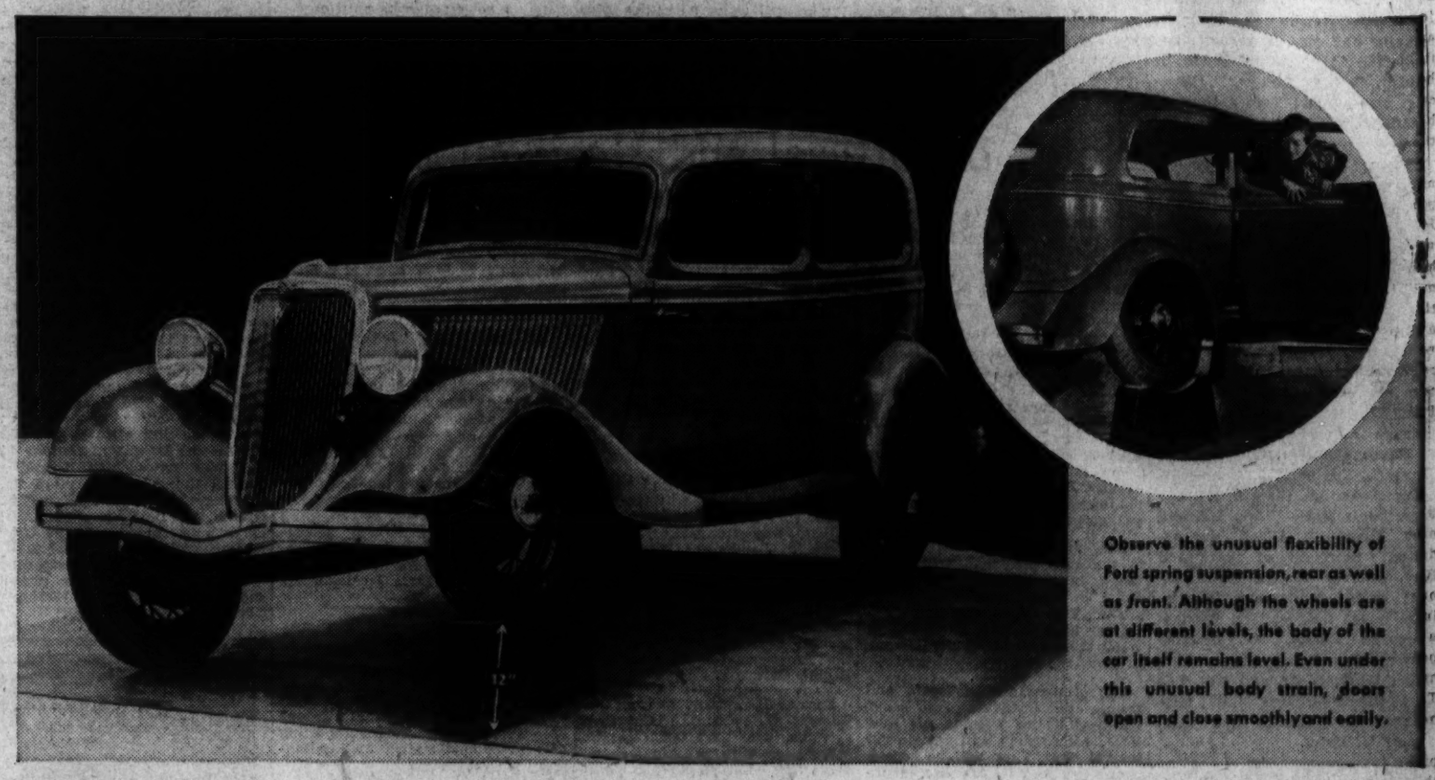
SEE THE FORD EXHIBIT

At the Auto Show, Washington Auditorium, January 27th to February 3d



Observe the unusual flexibility of Ford spring suspension, rear as well as front. Although the wheels are at different levels, the body of the car itself remains level. Even under this unusual body strain, doors open and close smoothly and easily.

Free Action for all 4 wheels

plus the safety of a front axle and comfort of Cantilever Springs

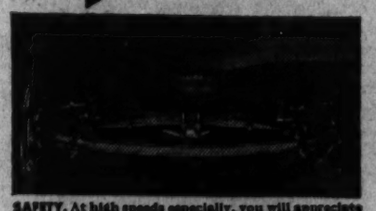
A GREAT deal of thought is being given today to springs. Various experiments are being tried in an effort to get independent action for an automobile's front wheels.

All of which is simply another tribute to the soundness of Ford engineering and the Ford V-8 for 1934. When you drive this car you get free action not only for the front wheels—but for all 4 wheels.

Ford transverse cantilever springs provide individual suspension for both front and rear axles. In the new Ford these springs have been made more flexible. This type of construction is not experimental and has the advantage of unequalled comfort plus the proved safety of a front axle.

This new Ford combines V-8 power with gasoline economy—20 miles to the gallon at a speed of 45 miles per hour, in exhaustive road runs. It will do 80 miles an hour without difficulty. At 50 or 60 miles per hour it is actually running at ease!

This reserve power means acceleration unequalled by practically any other make of American automobile, regardless of cost.



SAFETY. At high speeds especially, you will appreciate the safety of a sturdy axle construction.

EASY STEERING. Ford spring suspension helps this car to "hold the road" and makes steering easier.

CLEAR-VISION VENTILATION. In the new Ford ventilation system, the window is all in one piece. There are no "blind spots" to obscure vision.

Standard Oil Executive's Granddaughter Plans Spring Bridal.

The engagement of Miss Natalie Mai Coe, daughter of Mr. William Robertson Coe, of New York and Oyster Bay, Long Island, to Commendatore Leonardo Vitetti, Counselor of the Italian Embassy in London, has been announced.

Miss Coe, who has been a frequent visitor in Washington as the guest of her godmother, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, is a granddaughter of the late Henry Huddleston Rogers, an executive of the Standard Oil Co. Her mother, who died nine years ago, was Miss Mai Rogers, daughter of the late Mr. Rogers and his first wife. Miss Coe is a niece of Lady Fairhaven, of London, whose husband, the late Urban H. Broughton, died in England in 1929 before his intended elevation to the peerage. The title was then bestowed upon his son, Baron Fairhaven. Miss Coe is the sister of Mr. Robert Coe, well remembered in Washington as "Bobby" Coe, who was here several years ago in the State Department.

Miss Coe was presented to society in New York at a brilliant ball given at the Ritz-Carlton on Christmas night, 1930. The setting for the ball was a magnificent reproduction of the entrance of the house at the Cherokee Plantation home of Mr. and Mrs. Coe near Yemassee, S. C. Mr. and Mrs. Coe, who are spending several weeks at Cherokee Plantation, were joined last Saturday by Miss Coe. The bride-to-be is a graduate of Spence School in New York and also attended Foxcroft School at Middleburg, Va. Miss Coe was presented at the Court of St. James in 1930. She has spent much time since then traveling abroad.

Commendatore Vitetti served as First Secretary of the Italian Embassy in Washington several years ago. He was born in Italy, studied at the Royal University, Rome, obtaining the degree of doctor of laws. Later he entered the Italian diplomatic service. On two occasions he was sent to Geneva as a member of the Italian delegation to the meetings of the League of Nations. He left Washington in 1930 and returned the following years as a member of the party of Signor Dino Grandi, then Italian foreign minister. He is a Commander of the Crown of Italy and a Chevalier of the Order of Santi Maurizio e Lazzaro.

The marriage will take place in the spring at Planting Fields, the Coe estate at Oyster Bay.

Intellectuals In Reich Hard Hit by Regime

Woman Doctor Describes Observations of Plight Among Some of Sex.

The attitude of Hitler's National Socialist party toward women has created a desperate situation among the so-called intellectuals in Germany—the educators, lawyers, doctors, judges and other professional people. In keeping with the Nazi idea that woman's place is in the home, many of these women have been dismissed from their positions, according to Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer, who has just returned from a ten months' stay in Germany.

Dr. Brunauer, national secretary of international relations for the American Association of University Women, found that while the intellectuals were having a difficult time, the housewives and women students subscribed in large numbers to the Nazi idea of woman's status in the social scheme.

School Dismissals.

"In Hamburg, where there were formerly nine women school principals, there is not one today," she said yesterday afternoon in her office in the A. A. U. W. clubhouse. All of them have been dismissed, and many of the elementary school principals are being replaced by men. "Women doctors are having an exceedingly hard time, as the hospitals are expelling them from their staffs. This means that they will be forced to give up their careers, in many cases, as private practices in Germany are usually unsuccessful. All doctors try to find positions on hospital staffs. The National Socialist or Nazi regime now prohibits women from serving as judges and has made it almost impossible for them to practice law."

"Many of these unfortunate ones who have been dismissed from their positions are forced to accept food and lodging from their families who, in frequent cases, are hard pressed financially. Some have left Germany and are trying to start anew in a strange land. Some of the educators are managing to exist on small pensions. But even worse than the financial distress is the psychological effect upon these women, who have spent years in the universities preparing themselves for a career, only to find their life work taken away from them. Many of them say that the women's movement in Germany has been set back two generations by the attitude of the present regime.

Blight to Future.

"Unless conditions are changed the next generation will contain few professional women since, under recent regulations, only one woman to every ten men is permitted to enroll in a university. This regulation came as a blow to many who had previously been entirely in sympathy with the National Socialist party," continued Dr. Brunauer.

"But there are many women, members of the great middle class, who are perfectly happy with existing conditions. They have always believed that woman's ideal sphere is within the confines of her home. They not only want a domestic life for themselves. They want others to have it, too. Then there are a large number of girl students who have been influenced by the wave of romanticism that has swept over Germany within the last year or so. These students are doubting whether a career in the professions is productive of happiness. They are wondering if it isn't better to look up to some 'big strong man,' make a home for him and bear him children. They, naturally, are not resentful of conditions brought about by the Nazi party, but are in perfect accord with them.

"The working classes are not perturbed by the fact that women are being weeded out of the professions. They would not be likely to get into the universities anyway. Under the Nazi government they are able to borrow money upon which to marry, and marriage is usually the factory girl's ambition."

New Dowry System.

"The government, in instituting the dowry system, had a twofold purpose," explained Dr. Brunauer. "It will increase the birth rate and it will gradually take women out of jobs so that men can be employed. When a couple without sufficient funds wishes to marry, the government will advance a loan of 1,000 marks without interest, providing the woman has held a paid position for at least six months in the previous three years. She must promise not to hold a paid position until the loan is repaid unless the family's income falls below 125 marks a month. For each child born before the loan is repaid, a reduction of 250 marks is made in the debt. I didn't meet any people who had been married on one of these loans, but I understand that many young men and women are taking advantage of the offer."

Dr. Brunauer said that one of the most interesting of the recent developments in the situation is the formation of a small feminist group within the National Socialist party.

"This group, although supporters of Hitler's regime, began to realize that women were losing the independence they had gained through a hard fight after the World War. They are combating the Nazi cry of 'woman's place is in the home' by saying that that idea is not Germanic but Oriental. And that is about the shrewdest argument they could use," laughed Dr. Brunauer. "Anybody who knows anything about the new Germany knows that it wants to be as Germanic as possible."

Democratic Men and Women Vie in Spelling Bee Tonight

Secretary Roper Will Ladle Out the Stickers, and Contestants Have Been Brushing Up in Long Unopened McGuffey's Speller for the Fray.

By Elizabeth Perrow.

The old order changeth!

Once knights in armor battled for the honor of fair ladies. Tonight there is to be a mighty battle of wits at the Woman's National Democratic Club. At that time the ladies, clad in the armor of their knowledge, are going to fight it out with the gentlemen who will be similarly fortified.

The contest is to be in the form of an old-fashioned spelling bee, and it promises to be most exciting. Many Washington notables are taking part, most prominent among them being Secretary Daniel C. Roper, who has agreed to call out the words.

For days both parties have been mobilizing and preparing for the fray. In Washington homes telephones have been ringing loudly, and feminine voices saying excitedly:

"Stickers" Are Found.

"My dear, I am simply frantic. How do you spell 'arythrophobia'?" And in another house: "Junior, would you please lend mother your spelling book? Yes, I know I am grown up and supposed to know how to spell and I do. I just want to refresh my memory."

And in their busy offices husbands are getting out long unused spelling books. For they are grimly determined that they will not be defeated by the weaker sex. They admit that they are handicapped, for most of them have let their stenographers do their spelling for many years, and they are frank to admit that they are sadly out of practice.

In this battle husbands and wives will be aligned against each other. Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, prominent lecturer, writer and suffragist, has no qualms whatever about the matter, and plans to spell down her husband, Harry W. Blair, Assistant Attorney General, in a way that he will remember.

One Feels Confident.

Mrs. Edward B. Meigs is looking forward gleefully to out-spelling her husband, a widely known agricultural expert. She feels that she will have no difficulty doing that; provided they do not spring some terror such as "eleemosynary" upon her.

"To tell the truth I haven't done much preparing for this contest," she confessed yesterday. "I only hope the other contestants haven't either. But I am hoping that some remnants of the spelling lessons I had in the days of my youth are still with me."

Optimism characterizes Mrs. George M. Eckels' outlook. "I feel certain that the women are going to win," she declared yesterday. "And I am going to do my best to help them."

"Of course I'll have to admit that I haven't much to pin my faith on. Most of the spelling I have learned I have picked up from reading. And I have never been in a spelling match in my life. The only person in my family who has ever been in one was my mother, and her defeat was notorious. She spelled calf c-h-a-l-f. And her example so mortified the rest of the family that no one has entered a spelling bee since.

"Do You Know How——"

"But I don't mind. Even if I go down on the first word I'll go down with flying colors. By the way," she added, "do you know how to spell iridescent?"

There is one faint heart among the ladies. Mrs. M. S. Szmczak says she has little faith in her ability as a speller. She says that she is not going to enter the contest unless it is absolutely necessary.

"You see," she confided, "we have a guest from out of town, and I hate to reveal my ignorance. But, of course, I may have to."

Mr. Edward Keating, who has selected the men to enter the contest, has unearthed some interesting facts. For instance, Mr. Wilbur Hubbard, from Maryland's Eastern Shore, refused to enter at all.

Machine Age Handicap.

"It would be most unfair for me to represent my sex," he said. "I bought the second dictating machine ever put on the market. And I haven't written a letter in 45 years."

But there are many men who still pride themselves upon their ability as spellers, and tonight will decide the winner. All the warriors are on their mettle. And certainly there will be none there who will say in the words of the our old first reader classic:

"I'm sorry that I spelt the word. I hate to go above you."

Eye Cosmetics Demanded by New Hat Style

"Off-the-Face" Mode Makes Mascara and Eyebrow Pencil Imperative.

Always a beauty asset, eye make-up is absolutely essential now that eyes have become the focal point of attention under the upflung brims of the new off-the-face hats. These smart-looking chapeaux, some of them resembling fishermen's sou'westers and others looking like naive baby bonnets, all perch so far back on the head that they actually make you look "undressed" unless your lashes are touched up with mascara and your brows outlined with a pencil.

After three years of wearing hats that dip wildly in front and obscure at least half of one's vision, most women agree that it is a relief to be "out in the open" with the sun on one's forehead and admiring glances on one's eyes.

Of course, eye make-up must be done very, very skillfully when the eyes are so exposed, or it may become artificial looking; but if you use reliable eye cosmetics and apply them sparingly you needn't worry about the results. The perfect mascara is of such consistency that it makes the lashes look delicately fringed instead of heavily beaded, and the correct kind of eyebrow pencil leaves a natural-looking line instead of a harsh one. The better type of eyelash darkener is nonsmarting and tearproof, too, preventing any smudges or flakiness that would be fatal with the eyes so much "in the limelight."

To make your eyes appear to best advantage while the new millinery mode holds sway—and that will be for at least a year, style experts say—you should also use a tiny bit of eye shadow to match the color of your eyes. Do not let this shadow extend above the natural indentation made by the eyeball, however, during the day. At night it can be extended to the eyebrow, very lightly, of course.

Housekeeping Provides Thrill For Only Woman Senator

Mrs. Caraway Cooks Dinner 'Twixt Session and White House Fete.

By Frances Mangum.

It was the maid's day off.

And it was also the evening of the White House Congressional reception.

And as luck would have it, it was a very busy day in Senator Hattie Caraway's office.

But the motherly-looking little Senator from Arkansas, who bears the distinction of being the only woman in the Senate, took time out to order lamb chops and fresh vegetables for dinner that night.

Yesterday she sat back of her desk in the Senate Office Building and laughingly remarked that she was probably the only Senator who had attended to business, gone home and cooked dinner, and then attended the White House function.

Proud of Her Dinner.

"And it wasn't a bad dinner, if I do say so," declared Mrs. Caraway. "Pinch-hitting for the maid is a matter of course for me," she continued. "During the years my husband was in Congress housekeeping was my business.

"Now, of course, I have considerably less time for it—but I still love it. I always think of housekeeping as a 'large job.' And, of course, I think being in the Senate is, too. I find I can't combine them very well, but I do the best I can. At any rate, we get along." There was a twinkle in the Senator's eye.

"I depend a lot on my maid. She's been with us about 25 or 30 years, so you see she knows our ways pretty well. Sometimes she plans the meals, and sometimes I do. In that way it isn't hard on either of us.

"Besides, fortunately, my family likes plain food. Of course, we favor the Arkansas dishes. Born and bred to them, I guess. We like corn pones, black-eyed peas, and a lot of things like that.

Eschews Paris Models.

"If I didn't have my present position I'd probably be right in the thick of keeping house again. I might even be making my own dresses, you can't tell. As it is, when I need a dress I go into a store and try on everything there until I find something I can walk out in."

Mrs. Caraway smoothed out the folds of her conservaitve black frock. A little white lace vest at the neck relieved the severe lines and sombre hue. She wore a soft wool scarf around her shoulders.

"I'm not nearly so interested in my personal apearance as I am in my business. Of course, I like to look nice and neat—I feel I owe that to my State—but I don't go in for couturiers or Paris models.

No Time for Hobbies.

"What would be the use? All I expect of my clothes is for them to be conservative. Why, you know," she declared quite seriously, "I just couldn't anymore go down there to the Senate in loud colors and a lot of furbelows than I could fly!

"My hobby?" The Senator smiled one of her very human smiles. "Goodness me, I guess I don't have time for one. If I did, though, it wouldn't be golf. I've never shot nine holes under a hundred yet. "But," she added with pardonable pride, "I did shoot a hole in par once."

Mrs. Caraway after her years of training in the Senate was able to flit from one subject to another as the questions arose.

She declared vehemently that she did not believe that politics and the upbringing of children went together at all.

"But, of course," she admitted, "there are extenuating circumstances sometimes. There are women who have to enter politics to look after their children. Personally, I'm glad I could be at home with mine when they were quite young. When I did enter Congress they were old enough to shift for themselves."

Looking back on the time she was asked to take her husband's place, Mrs. Caraway remembered how frightened she was at the mere thought of being Senator. She said she felt that it wasn't timidity, but chiefly lack of confidence.

"When I'd think of coming to Congress I was filled with awe—and would you believe, it, I still am," the Senator admitted with her characteristic chuckle. "But I'm not afraid anymore. I guess I've found out that Senators bark more than they bite!"

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Albinism is a condition in which there is almost an entire absence of the pigment which gives color to the skin, the hair and the eyes. It does not affect the pigments of structures other than these. The blood is properly red, and the liver, kidneys, muscles and other organs within the body of an albino are normal in color.

Albinos are animals (including men) born with the condition called albinism. Albinism affects whites, blacks and reds among men, and probably also browns and yellows. It affects fish, guinea pigs, rats and a long list of other animals.

Why it is, no one knows. It is congenital but not inherited, and, like birthmarks and cleft palates, there is no good explanation. Probably this occasional tendency to albinism has been present in man and animals since the world began, and probably also the tendency toward it is not on the increase.

There is a speculation that albinism explains the origin of the white race. In the beginning, this surmise says, the man animal was pigmented. Somehow or other a male and a female albino came to be born. They mated, and, for some reason contrary to present inheritance law, the quality of whiteness or deficient pigment appeared to stick. Their children were white. This theory probably is not true, but there are legends of white men found in America by visitors to the early Indians that are almost certainly based on instances of albinism.

Nearly every one of the more intelligent Indian tribes had this white-man legend. Cortez found it when he landed in Mexico, and Montezuma's belief in it caused him to welcome the Spaniards half way. The Chickasaw Indians had the same legend in Mississippi. So had the Cherokees in eastern Tennessee. It was one of the legends of many tribes of Indians in various parts of the country.

One of the best descriptions of albinism is that of Wafer, written about the San Blas Indians in Panama in 1699. Allsoff wrote of an Indian tradition of "a strange white race which preceded them." The Cherokees tell us that when they first arrived in the country they found it possessed by a certain moon-eyed people who could not see in the daytime. They were considered an albino race, "and these wretches were expelled. They lived in houses made of logs and covered with dirt. They made war on them and drove them away."

Woman's Political Status Held Supine

Mrs. Satchwell Says Sex Needs Own Party.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 25 (AP).—New York's first Republican Assemblywoman, Mrs. Ida B. Satchwell, called today for organization of a woman's party, saying masculine leaders have no wish for "intelligent, thinking women in either of the dominant political parties."

Mrs. Stachwell, elected in 1918, served one year in the Assembly. In an article published in State Service, Mrs. Satchwell said she was denied renomination after she refused to "say a few words in public" for a candidate to whom she was opposed.

The only women welcome in politics, she contended, are those "who will supinely carry out the wishes and programs of the men leaders."

Bathing Suits, Sports Frocks And Even Fur Made in Lace

Ardanse (the Baronne Accurti) will show entire spring wardrobes—sports, street and hot-weather clothes—made of lace.

Lace fur trims coats and suits. It is a sheer, filmy, springy fabric, crinkled to suggest galyak or caracul, which stands up as crisp as a white meringue and looks as soft as a fleecy cloud.

Lace bathing suits woven with rubber to give an Annette Kellermann figure will be the next novelty. They are made of a closely woven, rose-patterned lace which somewhat resembles lace jersey and are cut on the simplest lines.

Lace sports frocks made of a crisp lace suggestive of linen, woven in a pattern like the veins of a leaf, are another interesting note. They are cut with short sleeves, natural waists and medium-length skirts.

There also are hot-weather town frocks of a new lace which looks like net and which comes in a dark blue, splashed with cool white daisies.

Lace suits—ready for a morning's shopping or an afternoon tea—are included in the collection. The smartest comes in a crisp close-woven black lace, lined with black wool crepe and cut with a pert little jacket which nips in at the waist. It has a bow of white lace fur across the front.

Sequin lace, made to imitate sparkling spangles and used for evening frocks, is another novelty of the collection. It is woven with glistening little waxed circles which give a gleam almost as lively as real paillettes.

Printed lace also will be shown for evening gowns. It comes in a soft supple weave, patterned with varicolored flowers.

Senora de Cardenas Member Of Noted Diplomatic Family

Daughter of Constantin Nano World-Traveled; Left Young Son in Rumania to Be Educated, but Has Joyous Movie of His Activities.

A glimpse into the lives of those cultured, gracious women who preside over the embassies and legations in Washington is conclusive evidence that superior women the world over are interested in pretty much the same things: Home, husband, children, and in the cultivation of those talents with which nature has endowed them.

This interview is the fifth in a series with wives of distinguished foreign diplomats in Washington.

By Elizabeth Young.

Had her life been ordered otherwise, it is possible Senora de Cardenas might have become a violinist of note.

While the sweet, blonde wife of the Ambassador from Spain makes no such claim for herself, it seems a well-founded conjecture. She displayed remarkable aptitude for the violin in childhood, and is a person who would never have been content with the role of dilettante in any art which commanded her interest.

But she was born to the life of the diplomatic service, with its almost inexorable demand for travel. So the study of the violin went by the board, more or less.

Years later Senora de Cardenas discovered another art as engrossing as her early reaction to the music of the violin.

It was the art of flower arrangements as practiced by the Japanese. With the aid of a Japanese teacher, Azuma San, foremost exponent of the art of flower arrangements in that country, she attained a mastery of the meaning and technique of flower arrangements which amounts to music of another kind.

Marvels With Blooms.

Those bidden as guests to the stately Spanish Embassy at 2801 Sixteenth street are eager always to witness what new marvel the accomplished Senora de Cardenas has wrought through the medium of flowers. One of her greatest hobbies is the arrangement of flowers in advance of entertaining, although she is an accomplished horsewoman and plays a skilled game of tennis.

Not long ago she came upon a rare and unusual moss in a Washington street market and the discovery pleased her enormously.

She displayed a sample of the moss, along with a collection of dramatic and intriguing flower containers of Japanese make, to the woman's page reporter. The moss, long fronded and feathery, like fern, resembles pine branches in miniature.

"See," she said. "The Japanese use this moss for concealing the flower supports. I was so pleased to find it in a K street market."

Daughter of Diplomat.

Flower arrangements are an important, almost the dominant, decorative feature in the rooms of the Japanese home. These flower motifs are symbolic and change with the season. The motif for this season of the year includes bamboo, pine and plum blossom. Study of flower arrangements is a part of the education of every well-brought-up Japanese girl.

Senora de Cardenas was born in Dresden. She was Lucienne de Nano, daughter of Constantin G. Nano, now member of the Conseil Superieur Diplomatique of Rumania. Her father has spent 50 years in the diplomatic service of his country, and his present post is a distinction conferred upon senior diplomats of distinguished record.

"I come of quite a diplomatic family," she smiled. "My father is a diplomat. My brother is a diplomat. My husband is a diplomat. I've even got a cousin who is a diplomat. The same is true of my sister-in-law's family." The sister-in-law to whom she referred is Mme. Nano, wife of Frederick C. Nano, Counselor of the Rumanian Legation. Mme. de Nano is a daughter of the Mexican diplomat, the late Senor Miguel Covarrubias and sister of Mme. de Lima e Silva, wife of the Ambassador of Brazil.

Makes Tour of World.

Senora de Cardenas was educated at Baden-Baden in Germany and in Switzerland. It was the day of her arrival in Washington to stay with her brother and sister-in-law that the former Mlle. de Nano dined with Sir Henry and Lady Chilton and there met Senor Don Juan Francisco de Cardenas and was married to him six weeks later. Senor de Cardenas was then minister counselor of the Spanish Embassy here, a post he held for seven years.

They were transferred to Berlin for a year and spent another year in travel. This was followed by a year in the state department at Madrid and four years in Bucharest. Then they went to Japan for a year before being returned to Washington as principal envoys of their country.

After arriving in Washington, Senora de Cardenas stayed only a short time before going on to Rumania to visit their small son, Alonzo, who is 4, and who spends much of his time with his maternal parents at their homes in Bucharest and Muldavia.

"By the time I reached Bucharest, I had completed le tour du monde—the trip around the world," said Senora de Cardenas.

Joyous Movie of Son.

It is pleasant to talk with Senora de Cardenas about her son. She is reserved until she apprehends that one is deeply, genuinely interested. Then she may tell you that distance seems only to have strengthened the bond of love between them, that he gives to her wishes implicit obedience, and that the separation results from her desire to give him the advantage of a normal existence which he could not have had if he had accompanied his parents on their diplomatic tour of the world.

Through the medium of action photography, in which Senor de Cardenas is an expert, she keeps in touch with her son's life. It was the reporter's great privilege to see a film in which the beautiful, spirited youngster romped through a day's activities in Rumania, driving his pony cart; feeding the chickens, the geese and the pigs; wheeling expertly on his small tricycle, and finally, stomped valiantly through the intricacies of a Rumanian folk dance.

Miami Views Newest Shore Sport Styles

Miami Beach, Fla., Jan. 25 (AP).—Against a tropical background of palm trees and ocean whitecaps, the newest modes in seashore sport wear have just been displayed here.

While fashion experts and smart society looked on, more than 150 men, women and children models demonstrated the newest styles in resort apparel.

Simplicity, comfort and color were the dominating themes of the show, which accented homespun linens in natural tones, Mexican pottery colors for beach clothes and vivid hues for masculine wear.

Mexican Beach Styles.

Among the most striking beach styles for women were Mexican costumes of brown, orange and rust-colored sail cloth in slacks and jacket suits, with bright bandannas and huge straw sombreros.

Sail Cloth Slacks.

Tyrolean shorts, suspendered and worn with dark contrasting polo shirts, were shown, with peaked knitted alpine caps. Materials were flannel sail cloth on ribbed wool, and colors leaned toward hunter's green and brown.

Masculine fashions attracted wide attention in the show, with their display of vivid-hued sail cloth slacks in orange, yellow, scarlet, blue and rust.

For day wear, men models showed contrasting jacket and trousers or brown and gray, in solid colors and checks.

For evening, the young man of fashion next summer will wear a white tuxedo coat and black trousers, or a white mess jacket.

Shakespeare May 'Go Hollywood,' Too

Opinions Differ, But Old Plays Are Weighed.

Hollywood, Jan. 25 (AP).—Whether Shakespeare will come to Hollywood was a question with several answers today out here where movies are made.

The question came with the statement by Will H. Hays that the public soon may be ready for a cycle of Shakespeare in motion pictures.

Charles R. Rogers, independent producer, said Shakespeare as Shakespeare is out, that one can't feed American movie audiences blank verse. On the other hand, he said, Shakespeare has been in Hollywood for years, providing the bread and butter for writers and producers, who have been borrowing—without credit—from the Bard of Avon for years and years.

"In motion pictures," said Rogers, "you have to use modern language, and therefore Shakespeare is out."

Other producers think differently

John Barrymore says if Hollywood would take time out and read Shakespeare it would discover superior drama, "any of which is much better than some of the trash it is filming."

Shop Displays Potters' Art of Ancient China

By Ruth Anne Davis.

All the wonders of Washington are not in museums nor the hands of collectors. Some of them are in the Chinese antique shop, seven floors above the confusion and flurry of F street.

There arranged on shelves behind protective glass doors are ancient ceramics, some of them dating back thousands of years B. C., and lovely pieces of eggshell porcelain made during different Chinese dynasties, lovely old bronzes, screens and pictures. All of these bespeak the glamour and mystery of the Orient.

One of the rarest pieces exhibited is a large pottery vase, or jar, painted in black, brown and red. Until 1923 the gray clay jars of the Chou dynasty were regarded as the oldest Chinese ceramics, but Prof. J. G. Andersson, of the Swedish National Museum, discovered in 1924 that artistic pottery was made in China as early as 3,000 B. C. There are only a few of these now in existence, one in the National Meseum at Stockholm, another in Paris, and several specimens in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and one displayed here in the Chinese antique shop. This one has a price of $3,800.

Besides this beautiful and interesting old piece are some coral-colored jars dating back to the K'ang Hsi dynasty (1643-1723), when the manufacture of porcelain had reached its height in China. These jars are designed with interesting Buddhist symbols, including the crane, clouds and the good luck figures. The price, $3,000.

Another piece which has caused a lot of comment is the unglazed statue made during the T'ang dynasty (618-906). It represents the figure of a woman sitting down with her hands folded in her lap. This was discovered in the grave of a Chinese noblewoman.

The collection also includes several pieces of imperial porcelain plates, marked with the five-claw dragon. These plates were held in such reverence by the commoners that the penalty of death was upon any one outside the royal family who dared to use one.

A fireside screen measuring only a few feet in height boasts seven panels, each made up of marble blocks colorfully hand-painted and depicting scenes from well-known Chinese legends. On the back are lines of poetry, all signed by the artist.

There are so many unusual and interesting pieces that it would be impossible to cover even half of them here, but suffice it to say that here in this collection of Chinese antiques may be found pieces which are worthy representatives of Chinese art. Whether we can buy or not, it is an education to come and feast the eyes on so many things of rare beauty.

Already spring bags are beginning to appear. A local shop which usually manages to keep a jump or two ahead of the times has just received some made of the new fabric, rabba. These come in brown, black, green, red, wine and gray.

There are some in pouch style, with no trimming at all. Others cut in an irregular oblong shape trimmed in bright metal clips. In fact there are such a variety of styles and designs that all shoppers interested in replacing the worn winter bags will do well indeed to drop by for a few brief moments and see the infinite variety.

Spring may be just around the corner, but the new spring skirts are already here. There's a whole rack of them looking particularly tempting against the dull background of winter clothes.

These skirts are beautifully tailored, some of them buttoning up the side, others down the front. Their colors range from the soft sungold, Mexican clay, cactus green to pottery blue.

One of the loveliest perfumes on the market was created to express a legend, thousands of years old. Down through the centuries the tale has come to us of a young mandarin who loved and lost, and won again his bride. She was beautiful, "beautiful as the dawn," in the words of an old poet, but day by day she languished ever weaker. One day it was apparent her strength was leaving her. She murmured with her last breath that she would like a lotus, a symbol of eternal beauty, to hold in her hand.

It was winter and no lotus bloomed. But the young mandarin commanded a master craftsman to make a lotus from pure gold. The mandarin went into solitude and worked during sleepless nights and anguished days to create a fragrance for the golden flower.

Finally all was ready, and with great ceremony the flower was taken to his bride. She had ceased to breath, and lay still and white, but beautiful beyond words. The mandarin placed the flower in her hands. The perfume permeated the air. The lovely bride slowly opened her eyes. She lived again. It was the mystic fragrance of the golden lotus.

Now one of the leading perfumers of the world has created a fragrance which he calls, after the legend, Lotus d'Or—The Golden Lotus.

Accuses Some Colleges of Teaching Subversive Doctrine to Young.

Ridding the country of racketeers is a part of the National defense program in which women should play an important part, according to the Princess Cantacuzene, granddaughter of Gen. U. S. Grant.

"It is women's duty to see that our honesty does not slacken, that society is not overrun with criminals, that justice is not maladministered, and that America is a wholesome country in which to live," declared the princess yesterday afternoon when she addressed the ninth Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, in session at the Mayflower Hotel.

"So many people have broken the law in the last ten years, although they called themselves good citizens. Violating the prohibition law, making false declarations at customs houses, and a thousand other infractions tempted them while bootlegging and kidnaping served to build up the racketeers. The attacking of those evils is one measure of National defense that comes within women's province."

Demoralizing Doctrines.

The speaker deplored the doctrines that are being taught in our schools.

"Schools and colleges in every State are full of the doctrines that demoralize a nation," she declared. "But we women, if we care to attack that problem, can bring up our children to be patriots. That phase of National defense comes within our province daily. Patriotism, like air and sunshine, is the right of every youngster and should be put within his reach."

The Princess reminded the women that they have votes to use in backing the National defense law.

Mobilization of All.

"If we are patriotic we stand for the general mobilization of all our country's forces—labor and capital, industry and farms—all these groups to be made to contribute equally, should ever war occur. We may instruct our Representatives on Capitol Hill that we wish our country's protection to be adequate on land and sea and in the air. Singly and in masses the battle must be waged by us. It will be long and serious but if we would save our Nation we must be brave and waste no time."

Princess Cantacuzene's address was preceded by addresses by Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, Maj. Gen. George S. Simonds, Rear Admiral C. H. Woodward and Brig. Gen. C. H. Lyman. Each speaker conducted a brief open forum.

Gen. Fries traced the history of weapons from the Stone Age to the present time and declared that every advance and increase in weapons has meant an advance and increase in civilization. He quoted extensively from the Bible concerning the battles fought by the various tribes and nations. The retired army officer discredited the statement allegedly made by pacifists, that "wars never settled anything."

Parley Ends Today.

"The very opposite of that statement is true," declared Gen. Fries. "From the beginning of time wars have settled everything. Cuba is free today because of the fighting power of men under Wood, Roosevelt and Shafter, and the Navy under Sampson and Schley. It is wars that have made civilization."

Gen. Simonds told of the evolution of America's military policy and described the structure and organization of our Army. Gen. Lyman pointed out the part the Marine Corps plays in National defense. Admiral Woodward addressed the session on antipreparedness propaganda.

The conference will close this afternoon with a pilgrimage to the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

PRINCESS CANTACUZENE, granddaughter of the Union military leader of the Civil War, who in an address here yesterday called upon American women to help halt the advance of lawlessness in the United States.

Just Folks

By Edgar A. Guest.

I Go Home For Lunch.

In little towns I fancy still the factory whistle blows
At noon and homeward to his lunch the happy husband goes,
And women folks at twelve o'clock the midday meal prepare
Because their men are coming home and shortly will be there.
I tried it out the other day, went home to lunch and found
That city wives at noon don't care to have their men around.

"What, home for lunch?" the mother cried. "Oh, what a thing to do!
You know right well we haven't time to plan a meal for you."
The maid looked startled and she said:
"Give me my coat and hat!
I don't believe I care to work where men play tricks like that!
That means an extra place to set, an extra plate and spoon.
Besides we've nothing in the house to feed a man at noon."

I learned that I was wholly wrong; that times are different now
And coming home for lunch is one thing wives do not allow.
Two meals a day are quite enough for women folks to plan,
So henceforth at my favorite club my midday meal I'll munch
And never shock them so again by going home for lunch.

Group Here for Exhibit Tell of Natives' Amusing Reaction to Them.

"Furriners" have invaded one of the most remote sections of the West Virginia hills. And the natives are watching suspiciously the strange behavior of a group of persons who wear odd clothes, fritter away their time cutting queer looking creatures out of wood, or who become wildly enthusiastic about the way the sun shines on Farmer Brown's dilapidated old barn.

In the evenings they gather in the village store, talk the matter over and agree that "all city folks are queer, but the arist ones are just plain goofy."

As for the artists themselves—a group now holding an exhibition at the House of the Seven Arts—they are quite convinced that Yougeoghamy is a small Utopia. They are equally certain that it was tucked away in the mountains just to make artists happy. Such beauty, peace and congenial company are seldom found in one small place, they say.

"There is nothing unusual about it," Miss Mary Gresham, one of the members, said yesterday. "It is just a very lovely place where serious artists go to work. And I am afraid that persons who are looking for Bohemian atmosphere will be sadly disappointed in it.

"Of course there are interesting persons in the colony. One of these is David Watson, a young writer of scientific books who lives the life of a hermit. Persons first notice him because, though less than 30 years old, he has a long beard. He lives in a secluded house in the mountains and only goes down into the village once in a great while to see what has happened since his last trip.

"We have musicians who come up so they can play for their own pleasure. We have sculptors, writers and painters. Also persons who like to read and think in seclusion.

"Life in the village is very simple and ideal for the artist. We live in small cabins where we work hard and are not disturbed while we are working.

"There is an old tavern where we gather in the evenings, sit around a big open fire and talk. New artists are always welcome if they are real artists. We are not interested in persons who play at art."

Afterwards.

By Katherine Smith.

I once had strength for anger, pride
For argument.
I once had speed for arrows when
My bow was bent.

But now my hands are limp, my heart
Too weak to sigh—
The lovely love I killed was far
Too young—to die.

What Today Means

"Aquarius."

If January 26 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:15 to 9:15 a. m., from 1:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 8 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 10:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 3 to 4 p. m. and from 10 to 11 p. m.

If you were born on January 26, you are predisposed to let people form an erroneous impression of your personality. Anyone meeting you casually is very apt to regard you as being very radical in your opinions. The manner in which you freely give vent to your ideas on any and all subjects creates also the impression you are self-opinionated. As a matter of fact, a breach of conventionality on the part of others meets with your disapproval, and you are among the first to condemn any act involving real radicalism. It would be wise for you to restrain the desire of hearing your own voice so much and to weigh carefully your statements before giving them expression. Be careful that you do not make a demand which is unreasonable.

The child born on January 26, as it grows older, will have a tendency to "show off" on any and all occasions. This trait should be discouraged as soon as it is evidenced. It will have a brilliant mind, which will require being very careful that it absorbs only the right ideas, and that it is molded into a conservative line of thinking. With careful guidance, children born on January 26 develop into unusually bright men and women.

If you are a woman and were born on January 26, although possessing a great deal of sentiment you give a person, not knowing you well, the idea that you are cold and unsympathetic. This is largely a pose on your part, and should be corrected. It would be well for you to give expression of more interest in both people and things and you will gain in popularity.

A man born on January 26 has a tremendous amount of surplus energy. It is advisable to use this cautiously. Plan with more care the way you expect to spend your time. You use up too much energy getting mad over trifles. Cultivate the habit of letting your better nature assert itself; if you do, you will be amazed at the results shown financially.

People born on January 26 can achieve success in almost any line of business or profession if they seriously apply themselves. They are critical, but appreciative, of the fine points of art. If you were born on January 26 you are inclined to be an overindulgent parent, but your children will always idolize you. Fireside and home hold the greatest attraction for you and assures your having that which money can not buy—happiness.

Shirts Are Styled to Satisfy Demands For Outdoors Wear and Greater Comfort

By Amos Parrish.

New York, Jan. 25.—Though the codes haven't provided for it, the Recovery Man is having new kinds of shirts provided for him. Reasons? The trend for sportier, more outdoorish clothes.

And the constant demands men are making for more comfort combined with looks—is another thing responsible for it. The skill of the shirtmakers, who are learning more and more about where a man needs shirt material—and where it's just superfluous—is a third important reason for it.

One of the most popular changes they've made is in the much-worn three-inch-point collar attached shirts. Their points are wider-spread than before. Their backs stand higher on the neck . . . all the way round. And their collars are fuller . . . billow around the knot of your tie more than they used to. Good point when you use a pin to hold the points together.

Eyelet-Punched Collars.

Then there's the collar-attached shirt whose flaps are eyelet-punched to accommodate a pin . . . worn more now. It's another collar that comes up higher on the neck with short points or medium points. Important thing to remember when you buy this kind: Be sure the eyelets are placed high enough so the collar doesn't roll up or collapse when it's pinned.

It's just about now that a lot of men begin to fuss about their back collar buttons . . . but still want a more formal, sprucer, starched collar. So they're buying more shirts starch-collar-attached, with regular three-inch points. Some of them with short rounded points. But all of them high on the neck.

Better Shirt Cutting.

That shirtmaker-skill we mentioned . . . You're seeing it in more individualized shirts, cut more to the figure. The old idea of a shirt which fitted in the collar and sleeve length, but nowhere else . . . is passing. And a newer shirt, more trimly tailored through the body, has come in.

And notice the newer shirts run richer in coloring. They've really distinctive patterns worked up in colors several shades deeper than the pale types that now fill your bureau.

This deep shade trend is young. But watch it gain when the weather gets warmer . . . and suits get lighter, requiring deeper shirt colorings to contrast with them.

Send for Color Leaflet.

Another new shirt point is that you can now get your all-weather favorite, the Oxford, in new fancy allover weaves and tweed effects that will go particularly well with your new tweed or cheviot suit. You can see some actual examples of these newer Oxford weaves and some of the new deeper shirt colorings we mentioned, if you'll send for our new leaflet which tells some of the best shirt colors and materials for spring and summer wear.

Gallows of Chance

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

The Story Thus Far.

Set upon and chloroformed by a gang of masked men while motoring to London, following a visit with Lord Keynsham, Sir Humphrey Rossiter, England's home secretary, awakens to a terrifying situation. He is in a cell. Confronting him is a man—masked. "Cecil Brandt," says the man, "is to be hanged, as you are well aware, at 8 o'clock tomorrow morning. You alone can save him. If you don't give him a reprieve you will die—here and now."

The masked man reviews the case. According to the evidence Brandt had killed Vervase Benham in his wife's study. Firm in his refusal to grant a reprieve, Sir Humphrey is led to a gallows—a rope is placed about his neck. A messenger arrives with word that Brandt's wife, famous actress and close friend of Sir Humphrey, is waiting at the home secretary's London residence—eager to tell the truth. The mysterious band releases Sir Humphrey.

Katherine Brandt tells him that Benham, discussing their new play, had entered her bedroom where Brandt found them. She said that Brandt—learning she was guiltless—had carried the body to the study and ordered her to preserve silence. She departs after obtaining Sir Humphrey's promise to have Brandt reprieved. The home secretary faints as he lifts the telephone to call Wandsworth Prison. On being revived hours later he learns that Brandt has been hanged.

Mrs. Brandt, whom he visits many weeks later, tells him she believes her husband had been insane and did not want to live. Sir Humphrey calls on Scotland Yard to run down the band that abducted him. Gen. Sir Harold Moore, chief commissioner, details three men to go to Norwich in the hunt.

"Sir Humphrey," he explained, "I want you to meet the three members of my staff whom I have chosen to look into this affair of yours. They will start for Norfolk tomorrow morning, but they were exceedingly anxious — Inspector Smithers particularly—to ask you a few questions first. I thought you would not mind if I brought them round. They are leaving by the newspaper train."

"Certainly not," Rossiter acquiesced, "although there is little I can say beyond what I told you this evening."

"Inspector Smithers, you have already met," Col. Matterson said, pointing to the sallow-faced man with the black mustache. "This is Inspector Simpson, who has done some excellent work for us."

Detective Pank.

Sir Humphrey shook hands with Inspector Simpson—a strongly built man, with a ruddy complexion, bright blue eyes and a somewhat ferocious expression.

"And this," the subcommissioner concluded, "is Detective Pank. Pank, I may say, still has his spurs to earn, but he has done some useful work and he happens to be a Norfolk man."

Detective Pank, under the average height but with a well-set-up, athletic figure, sandy-haired, with an insignificant but thoughtful face, rose to his feet and shook hands with obvious nervousness. Sir Humphrey established himself in an easy chair. Inspector Smithers leaned respectfully forward.

"We are sorry to trouble you, sir," he began, "but there are one or two points upon which we should like information before we leave. Col. Matterson has been in telephonic communication with Norwich this afternoon, and, with the help of some maps we have bought, we have a fair idea of the neighborhoods of Keynsham Hall.

"There seems to be only one lonely tract of country anywhere near, and that's around Thetford. To reach that part of the world from Keynsham you would be on a straight road nearly the whole of the time. Do you remember, sir, after you left Keynsham Hall whether you turned to the left or to the right?"

Best Road to London.

"To the left," was the prompt reply.

"Reverse number one," Inspector Smithers observed, with a little grimace. "That would be the Norwich road and probably the best road to London. Can you tell us whether you found yourself upon a twisty road or whether you just went straight ahead?"

"At first we were turning corners all the time," Sir Humphrey admitted. "I was surprised, in fact, to find the road so narrow and winding. I really can not tell you much about it, though, because I was very tired and I was dozing nearly all the time."

"Thank you. Can you describe the room in which you found yourself when they removed the bandage from your eyes? Did it look like a room in an old house or a modern one?"

"It looked like nothing except what it was supposed to represent," Sir Humphrey declared. "It looked like a glorified prison cell."

"With reference to the courtyard," Smithers asked. "Did it posses any distinction? Did it look like the courtyard of a famous country house, for instance?"

"It might have been the back courtyard of any place," Sir Humphrey decided, "and I take it that it was a back courtyard because there were no large entrance gates. There was nothing particularly imposing about it except the high red brick walls and the fact that it was of considerable extent. To tell you the truth, I did not look about much. I was absorbed by the ghastliness of the newly built shed and the rest of the environment."

Sleuth Studies Notebook.

"About how long do you believe that you were in the car between the time of leaving Kenysham Hall and your arrival at your destination?"

"Hard to say," Sir Humphrey replied, "but I should think it was between half and three-quarters of an hour."

Smithers studied his notebook for a moment.

"I don't wish to bother you, sir, with questions about points on which we already have information, but I gather that you were not able to recognize any of your captors?"

"Certainly not."

"You have no suspicion as to the identity of any one of them?"

"Not the slightest."

"Your impressions, however, especially concerning the one who appeared to be the ringleader, were that they were men in a superior class of life?"

"That is so," Sir Humphrey agreed, "with the exception of the man who played the part of hangman. He smelled strongly of drink and was wearing a shabby gray suit with white paint marks upon it."

Inspector Smithers turned to his chief.

"So far as I am concerned that is all, sir," he announced. "We are not proposing to ask Sir Humphrey any of the questions which we can find out for ourselves by inquiries in the neighborhood."

Inquires About Masks.

"Have you anything to ask, Simpson?" the subcommissioner inquired.

"Nothing at all, sir."

"If I might," Detective Pank intervened a little nervously, "I should like to ask about those white masks. Did they seem like new ones made for the occasion or as though they had been worn before?"

Sir Humphrey nodded approval. The question appeared to him to have some point.

"Curiously enough," he confided, "they seemed to me as though they had been worn before. The one on the mans' face, who stood at my right hand when we passed out into the yard, might almost have been described as soiled."

"Thank you, sir."

"Anything else, Pank?" the subcommissioner asked good-naturedly.

"Nothing else, sir, thank you."

Colonel Matterson rose to his feet.

"Then I don't think we need worry you any further, Sir Humphrey," he said.

"Can I offer you gentlemen anything?" Rossiter inquired, with his hand upon the bell.

"Thank you, no," Matterson replied. "I am sure the others feel as I do. We quite understand that you have to be kept very quiet for a time, and, believe me, we won't bother you unless we are driven to it. Furthermore, the whole of our inquiries—you may be sure of that—will be kept utterly and entirely secret. I quite realize, and so do my men here, that the kidnaping of the home secretary is a matter which must never become public property, unless when the mystery is solved it reaches the criminal courts."

Lady Louise Calls.

They all signified assent. Sir Humphrey shook hands with them and touched the bell. Parkins showed them out.

Sir Humphrey's habit of using his latchkey and going straight to his library when he returned at the end of the day to Chestow Square was responsible for the thrill of pleased surprise he experienced on the following evening. It was as though the sedate and dignified apartment had been transformed and beautified in exquisite fashion by unseen hands. Bowls of dark red roses adorned the chiffonier. A cunningly fashioned tray of deep purple violets stood upon his writing table. There were vases of arum lilies, late chrysanthemums with long-petaled blossoms, carnations and hyacinths in different parts of the room, and a flame of scarlet azalea set in a distant corner. The perfume was so sweet as to be instantly arresting. He paused to look around him, and Louise came out of the shadows, wiping her fingers upon a towel and laughing softly.

"Am I going to be in terrible disgrace?" she asked. "Forgive me, please. Parkins begged us to come in and wait for you, and I brought you all that our hot-houses could produce from Norfolk. I could not bear to think of Parkins arranging them, and he said you might be another hour. That is the end of my excuses."

"As though you needed any," he protested, amazed at the thrill of pleasure which her unexpected presence had caused him. "Louise, my dear, how nice to see you."

Inquires About Health.

"You are really better?" she asked, looking earnestly into his face. "You are thinner, you know. Come and sit down. May I stay for a few minutes and talk to you? Edward has gone away but he is calling back for me."

"May you? Why, of course."

He pushed an easy chair up to the fire, opposite his own, and touched the bell, summoning Parkins, who made prompt and respectful appearance. As a rule, he would have very much resented the interference of any one decorating his apartments, but he approved most heartily of Lady Louise.

"Very good, sir."

With the closing of the door she leaned forward in her chair.

"I have been so anxious to hear from your own lips about your illness," she confided. "Please tell me. Edward did not walk you too far that last day, did he? Lester Harwood said he felt too tired to shoot next morning."

Sir Humphrey shook his head.

"It was not that," he assured her. "I am afraid I was run down before I came."

"Did you feel ill on the way up?" she asked anxiously.

Trying Interview.

"Not altogether well once or twice," he admitted. "However, I got here. I had rather a trying interview afterward and perhaps that upset me. While we are on the subject of my illness, thank you so much, and thank Edward if I don't see him this evening, for all your inquiries and the flowers."

"We felt responsible in a way," she confessed. "I was so miserable about it that I went off to Cannes for a fortnight as soon as I heard that you were really out of danger."

Bank Hearing Begun Before Judge Adkins

Opening Arguments of Counsel Require Entire Day.

Hearing on a petition by depositors of the closed Park Savings Bank to have directors and stockholders of that institution held liable for the $2,500,000 shortage of the bank, was begun yesterday before Justice Jesse C. Adkins, in the District Supreme Court. The day was consumed by opening arguments of counsel.

Depositors are seeking to have the directors and stockholders held liable for the shortage on the basis of a copartnership, or that of "liquidating trustees."

The copartnership plea was advanced because the bank's charter expired in 1929, and the bank had been ruled since that time as an apparent corporation. The "liquidating trustee" angle was injected because depositors argued officers of the bank should have liquidated its affairs when the charter expired.

Robert S. Stunz, former executive officer of the Fourteenth street bank, committed suicide in the basement of his Kalmia street home shortly after the bank was closed in the National banking moratorium of last March. After that it was discovered he had embezzled, or stolen, $1,000,000. Additional losses accrued through "bad loans." Four persons, one of them John Cooke Grayson, brother of Admiral Cary T. Grayson, were indicted in connection with the collapse of the bank.

Grayson, now seriously ill at his Charlottesville, Va., home, was a chief National bank examiner. In that capacity, it was alleged, he tipped off Stunz that examiners were coming and the necessary precautions were taken. The hearing, which will last several days, is before Justice Jesse C. Adkins, District Supreme Court.

Work to Eat, Md. Camp Rule

27-Hour Schedule Keeps Loafers Away.

Middletown, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl.). As an evidence that 90 of the "star" boarders at the CWA transient home in Brunswick prefer to take life easy and not look for work of any kind, officials announced today that the population of the camp is being rapidly depleted.

This resulted from the 27-hour week schedule adopted for members of the home, numbering more than 100. Quite a few of transients came to the town from other camps, having been informed that a life of ease awaited them here. It appears, however, that the transients were fooling themselves, and from now on every inhabitant will be put to work in the exchange for his meals, lodging, and clothing. The men are being paid for three hours' work each week at the rate of 30 cents per hour for tobacco money.

Up until the work schedule was adopted transients seemed to flock to Brunswick from all sections of the country and several days ago it was necessary to find larger quarters to lodge them. It was stated today that the population had decreased nearly one-half within a few days.

The remaining members of the home have been put to work in South Mountain, near Burkittsville, to assist forest wardens, clearing away undergrowth and the establishing of fire lines, which will prove of value in combatting forest fires.

Yesterday two of the transients were arrested and turned over to authorities from Grafton, W. Va. where they were said to have escaped from jail after assaulting a turnkey. The two men, who gave their names as W. Clyde Demoss and Howard Shaw, jr., were awaiting trial as suspects in the robbery of a Grafton drug store.

Clerk, on Sick Leave, Commits Suicide Here

Paul Bredekamp, 45, of 2840 Myrtle street northeast, committed suicide yesterday, according to police.

His body was found by his brother, Herman Bredekamp. He had slashed his wrists and turned on the gas. Police were told he had been a clerk at the Washington Terminal Co. since 1912, and was on sick leave.

Bredekamp is survived by his widow, a second brother, Henry Bredekamp, and sister, Miss Ruth Bredekamp.

Anacostia Is Opened to Public on Saturdays and Sundays.

Newly landscaped and renovated, the Naval Air Station at Anacostia, D. C., is to be opened to visits by the public on Saturday afternoons and on Sundays until 4:00 p. m., the commanding officer, Lieut. Comdr. W. K. Harrill, announced yesterday.

Now completing the fifteenth year of its history, the station has been developed from a point of obscurity to a place of highest importance in naval aviation. Its new administration building, hangars, shops, laboratories and accessory buildings, where once there was only marshy ground, stand on well-kept land on the western edge of Bolling Field.

Development of the field has involved building roads, raising the elevation of the sea wall to stop flooding at hightides, removal of dumped material accumulated over many years, planting of trees, flowers, and painting of all buildings.

A self-sustaining unit, the station is divided into departments of operations and repair, flight test, supply, medical, public works, radio and administration. As the plane testing laboratory for all Naval aviation, planes submitted for service or flight-tested here to determine possibilities as service types. The operations and repair departments operate some 30 planes of various types for the station and the personnel of the Bureau of Aeronautics.

Band concerts are to be held every Friday at the station from 12 to 1 p. m. during good weather. The station is reached by way of the Anacostia bridge, Nichols avenue and Howard road.

Comprehensive plans are in preparation for further landscaping carried out by station personnel with the aid of PWA assistance. Plans are under way to construct a new road from the Anacostia bridge along the waterfront to the present entrance of the Air Station by May 1.

"Yeomen F" Bill Offered in House

To Commemorate Service in Naval Reserve.

A bill providing for the incorporation of the National Yeomen F., a national patriotic organization, in the District was introduced in the House yesterday by Representative Connery (Democrat), Massachusetts and referred to the House District Committee.

The aim of the organization, Connery explained, is "to foster and perpetuate the memory of the service of Yeomen F in the United States Naval Reserve force during the World War."

A report would be made annually by the organization to the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and would deposit manuscripts and collections in the museum.

U.D.C. Seeks Authority To Erect Road Marker

Authorization for the United Daughters of the Confederacy to erect a stone marker at the zero milestone of the Jefferson Davis National highway in Washington, was asked yesterday in a joint resolution introduced by Representative Clark (Democrat), North Carolina.

The marker would be approved by the Fine Arts Commission and the site selected by the director of parks and buildings in cooperation with the U. D. C.

Slice of 40% In Virginia Car Fees Probable

Bill, Supported by Peery, May Govern Licenses for This Year.

By Doug Warrenfels.

Richmond, Jan. 25.—Virginia automobile tags probably will cost 40 per cent less this year.

A bill calling for sharp reductions in such license fees, supported by Gov. Peery, was introduced in the Assembly today by Delegate Walter H. Scott, Roanoke. The author announced he would seek passage in time to govern issuance of 1934 plates.

Other legislation proposed included measures to permit jury service by women.

Under the Scott proposal license plates for all cars weighing less than 3,000 pounds—including about 70 per cent of the machines in the State, would cost $10; tags for cars of 3,000 to 4,000 pounds would bring $15; 4,000 to 5,000 pounds, $25; 5,000 to 6,000 pounds, $35; more than 6,000 pounds, $45.

The present rate is 70 cents per 100 pounds. Another tag bill, advanced by Delegate John Q. Rhodes, Louisa, was similar to the Scott measure except for a provision to make owners of cars between 3,000 and 3,500 pounds pay $12.50.

Delegate Charles W. Moss, Richmond, offered the bills to make women eligible for selection on grand and petit juries. He argued they were entitled to aid in administering the law.

Delegates William D. Medley, Arlington; Harrison Eacho, Henrico, and Samuel Buxton, Warwick, introduced a bill to repeal a law under which their counties would enter the Byrd road plan by agreement between boards of supervisors and the State highway commission. They would retain the right to participate by direction of local option elections.

Meanwhile, leaders predicted the House would delay consideration of the Hall liquor-control bill until Monday. The measure, proposing a State-controlled dispensary system, was reported favorably by the finance committee.

St. Elizabeths Scaffold Plunge Hurts Six Men

One Seriously Injured on Concrete After Fall of 30 Feet.

Six workmen were injured, one seriously, at St. Elizabeths Hospital yesterday when a scaffold broke, plunging them 30 feet to a concrete areaway.

The scaffold was swinging from atop the hospital power house.

Robert Huff, 35, of 1245 Jackson street northeast, suffered the severest injuries. He received a possible fractured skull, fractured jaw and lacerations of his face and body. He was admitted to the hospital in a serious condition.

Others hurt included Grover C. Ruth, 44, superintendent of the Standard Arch Co., Frostburg, Md., lacerations and contusions; Ernest Robbins, 44, of 226 Fifth street southeast, sprained right ankle and lacerations; Herbert Metzler, 37, of 435 Sixteenth street southeast, lacerations to chin and hands; Chester Eppard, 21, of 629 Raleigh place southeast, injured right hip and left knee, and Walter Tapscott, 33, of 631 I street northwest, minor cuts and injuries to his legs.

Frisco Smith, 24, of the Jackson street address, was also on the scaffolding. He grabbed a steel girder and saved himself from falling.

The scaffold was loaded with brick and iron. The men were covered with debris after the fall. Fellow workers carried the injured to the hospital's medical and surgical building.

The men were employed by the Standard Arch Co.

Rooster Struts While Scientists Wonder Why He Has No Wings

Bird Will Be Dissected After His Death at Smithsonian.

Miles Standish—a wingless Plymouth Rock rooster now resident at the National Zoological Park—is dedicated both in life and death to the cause of science.

Little recks this bird that his behavior is the subject of observation and that after his death dissecting knives of Smithsonian Institution workers will probe the secret of his lack of wings.

Science is not interested in this bird because there would be no wings in his fricassee. Its interest is to find out what happened to prevent the growth of his wings.

Dr. Herbert Friedman, curator of birds of the institution, hopes to learn facts on the evolutionary origin and mechanism of flight.

Unconscious that he may be the custodian of secrets which have decided science for so long, Miles Standish acts like any other bird of his age, sex and species—except he has no flying instinct.

When he is placed, ravenously hungry, on a table and corn strewn upon the floor, he hesitates a long time taking the risk of jumping down to obtain it.

Wingless specimens of normally winged birds reported hitherto have died shortly after emerging from the egg. But this rooster has reached the age of six months. He was given to the institution by Mrs. Olia Deering, of Rose Hill, Ky.

Fire Causes Damage In Piano Company

A basement fire in the Stieff Piano Co., 1340 G street northwest, resulted in undetermined damage yesterday. Firemen fought it for nearly half an hour.

An overheated furnace was believed to have started the fire. Flames were confined to the basement, but merchandise on an upper floor was reported damaged by smoke.

Cosmopolitan Awards Medal To R. V. Fleming

Unselfish Service Cited in Presentation to Riggs Head.

The Cosmopolitan Club's Distinguished Service Medal for the outstanding act of unselfish service to the community during 1933 yesterday was awarded Robert V. Fleming, president of Riggs National Bank.

Announced at a luncheon meeting of the club in the Carlton Hotel, the award was in recognition of his efforts during the bank holiday and resultant emergency last March, when he furnished aid in both the District and National situations.

The medal was presented to Mr. Fleming by Dr. J. Rozier Biggs, chairman of the Distinguished Service Medal Committee of the club, who inaugurated the custom of awarding the medal several years ago. Prominent Government officials and leaders in financial spheres witnessed the presentation.

High tribute was paid Mr. Fleming by Dr. Biggs during the presentation. In addition to lending his own services, asserted Dr. Biggs, Mr. Fleming turned over the Riggs Bank as headquarters for the District Bankers Association and the Clearing House Association, and provided space for examiners of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so that applications for loans by the various banks might be cnosidered promptly.

At present Mr. Fleming is chairman of the Federal Deposit Liquidation Committee for the Fifth Reserve District. In that capacity he is cooperating with Government officials in devising means to expedite the release of funds on deposit in closed banks.

He has been particularly active in National affairs during the past year, Dr. Briggs said. He has served as chairman of the Committee on Federal Legislation and chairman of the Federal Legislative Council of the American Bankers' Association, Dr. Briggs added, and had attracted favorable comment for his cooperation with Congress in connection with the banking legislation.

Mr. Fleming is a native Washingtonian. Born here in 1890, he was educated at Friends School, Western High School and George Washington University. He entered the employ of the Riggs Bank in 1907 as a messenger boy, and worked his way up to his present position.

Charges of using abusive language and making an arrest without due provocation resulted in a $50 fine against Policeman Frank E. Kenney, of the Sixth Precinct, found guilty by a police trial board.

Kenney was arraigned on complaint of Thomas L. Younger, assistant custodian of the Senate. Younger was arrested by the policeman on disorderly conduct charges. The case was dismissed in police court. Intoxication charges against Kenney were not upheld by the board.

Boy Walks Into Truck, Injuries May Be Fatal

Injuries which Emergency Hospital physicians fear may prove fatal were suffered yesterday by Charles Gilley, 13, of 1310 Twelfth street northwest, when he walked into the path of a truck at Thirteeth and K streets northwest.

According to police the boy was attempting to cross the street against a red light. He was struck by the side of the truck. At Emergency Hospital it was found he had a fractured skull and internal injuries.

Police Hunt Missing Laundry Truck Driver

A laundry truck driver, missing since noon Wednesday, was sought by police last night. Officials of Conger's Laundry asked that a search be made for Peter Miller, 50, of 2700 Ontario road northwest. He went to work as usual Wednesday, police were told, but failed to return either to his office or home.

Job Assigner Starts Second Year

Reminded by flowers, a birthday cake with one candle and congratulations of the Commissioners that the District committee on work planning and job assignments is entering its second year, Chairman Howard F. Clark paused long enough yesterday to have his picture taken, then plunged back into his work.

Payroll Up From $24,000 Weekly to $320,000 in 12 Months.

Capt. Howard F. Clark took a deep whiff of the roses which reposed in a vase on his desk, then sat down to contemplate what was next to be taken care of by the committee on work planning and job assignments of the District of Columbia committee on employment.

The flowers were a token from the District Commissioners and his other colleagues that the impressively named committee now is one year old. There was a birthday cake, too, but that was disposed of while congratulations were still being passed around.

After the committee was organized January 24, 1933, to provide work for the Capital's jobless, the first weekly pay roll was about $24,000 and 4,000 persons were employed. Now 19,500 persons are working on a $320,000 weekly pay roll.

"Congratulations on your first anniversary as chairman of the committee, I hope this will be the last anniversary," Commissioner Hazen said to Capt. Clark, or words to that effect. Meaning, of course, he trusted industry would soon pick up sufficiently to dissolve the unemployment problem.

Charter members, so to speak, of the committee were Capt. Clark, chairman; J. B. Gordon, vice chairman; D. J. Donovan, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, Harold Baker, Lieut. F. B. Butler, George S. Wilson and William C. Cleary, secretary.

A year's time has brought the following changes; Capt. Whitehurst, Mr. Baker and Lieut. Butler are missing and L. P. Robertson, LeRoy Halbert, David Ruml, George Clark and Lieut. Robert E. York have been added.

Capt. Clark was Assistant Engineer Commissioner when the committee was formed. And he still is, only he long since gave up the duties imposed by that office to devote all his time to work planning and job assigning.

Truck Operator Critically Injured

Crushed on Tree When Vehicle Rolls Back.

Crushed between his truck-trailer and a tree in front of 100 Four-and-a-Half street southwest, Lawrence Townsend, 26, of Richmond, Va., suffered critical internal injuries yesterday.

Townsend, the driver, had gone to examine the trailer when his helper, Willard Weatherford, 21, of Keysville, Va., attempted to start the vehicle.

Police said he put it into reverse, pinning Townsend against the tree.

Virginia Scans District Trade In Rum Stores

By a Staff Correspondent.

Richmond, Jan. 25.—With State-controlled liquor dispensaries virtually decided on by the Assembly, members from the Washington neighborhood tonight speculated over possible locations of stores.

Delegates predicted dispensaries would be located in Alexandria, McLean, Clarendon, Middleburg, Winchester, Charlottesville, Leesburg, Fredericksburg, Staunton and possibly Rosslyn.

A store could not be located in Falls Church, leaders explained, because of a town charter provision.

Delegate William D. Medley reported Clarendon seemed likely to obtain a dispensary.

"Clarendon," he explained, "is the logical place for a dispensary in Arlington County because it is surrounded by seven or eight other towns. It is the center of a thickly populated area."

Lower Prices Seen.

Medley said he would not be surprised to see establishment of a store in Rosslyn to draw District business should Virginia undersell Washington, as predicted by many members.

On passage of whisky legislation, selection of dispensary sites will be delegated to an alcoholic beverage control board. Under provisions of the bill as now constituted the board could establish stores anywhere in the State if there seemed to be sufficient demand to assure operation at a profit.

More than 100 stores probably will be opened soon after formation of the board. After six months, counties, cities or incorporated towns with more than 1,500 inhabitants could vote against operation of dispensaries within their boundaries.

Managers of liquor legislation have agreed the State probably will sell blended rye at as low as $1.50 a quart.

Dismissal of Dry Counts Is Urged

Richmond, Jan. 25 (Spl.).—A campaign to free all persons against whom court proceedings are pending for violation of State prohibition laws was launched today in the Assembly as Delegate John C. Mackall, of McLean, introduced a bill which would make mandatory dismissal of all dry law charges except those of driving while drunk.

Mackall announced he would insist upon passage of his measure instead of a provision in the Hall liquor control bill which would make such dismissals discretionary with judges.

"The voters have repudiated the dry law," Mackall declared, "and the judges shouldn't have any discretion."

Way Cleared For District Line Survey

Subcommittee of House Checks on Virginia Boundary.

No Opposition Is Met in Hearing; Fund Is Reduced.

The way was paved yesterday for favorable action on the bill to authorize appointment of a commission to determine just where the District of Columbia-Virginia boundary lies and to mark it accordingly.

A subcommittee of the House Judicairy Committee, headed by Representative Montague (Democrat), of Virginia, decided to report favorably on the measure, introduced by Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia. The full Judiciary Committee probably will vote favorably on the bill at a meeting next Tuesday.

No opposition develcped at the hearing yesterday and Representative Smith did most of the talking in favor of the legislation. He explained certain features of a similar bill which died in the House had been eliminated.

Appropriation Cut.

The subcommittee decided to attach several minor amendments, one of which reduces the appropriation for the commission from $15,000 to $10,000.

Thomas Settle, secretary of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, testified the bill has been approved by the commission and predicted it would protect fully the rights of the United States to property along the Potomac River waterfront.

The bill was indorsed in behalf of the District Commissioners by Walter L. Fowler, assistant corporation counsel.

Cites Problems Involved.

Smith explained that not only are land titles involved but a serious question of jurisdiction arises whenever a crime is perpetrated just south of the Highway Bridge.

One of the questions the commission will be called upon to decide is whether the District line should run along Roaches Run, once the southern bank of the Potomac River. Should the boundary be fixed at this point, the Washington-Hoover Airport would come within the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia.

The commission would comprise three persons, one to be named by the President, one by Virginia authorities and the third by the other two.

Child Scalded by Fall Into Washtub Dies

A 3-year-old baby, scalded Wednesday when she fell into a tub of hot water, died yesterday in Children's Hospital.

The youngster was Betty Quinn, 941 M street northwest. Her mother, Mrs. Alice Quinn, removed a tub of hot water from the kitchen stove and set it on the floor. A few moments later, while the mother continued her work, the baby fell into it. Besides her mother, the survivors are her father, Leon Quinn, a painter; a brother, Roland, 2, and a sister, Alice, 5. Funeral services will be held in Goldsborough, N. C.

$100,000 Purse Offered for Baer-Schmeling Bout in Baltimore

Franklin Has 25-Round Scheme

Promoter Told Stadium Would Be Available for May Fight.

Ross Signs, McLarnin Assured Guarantee of $35,000.

NEW YORK, Jan. 25 (U.P.).—Word that some 5,000 potential customers were turned away from last night's Ross-Petrolle fight, which was viewed by 12,500, was scarcely on the streets today before the matchmakers and promoters bombarded the sports desks with schemes ranging from the up-and-up to the downright fantastic.

Half a dozen promoters, assured that the public will still pay good money for fights, hatched schemes involving almost every known boxer from Benny Leonard to Paul Swiderski.

Only three of these undertakings came in for more than passing notice and these were:

25 Rounds Proposed.

The bouts above are listed in order of their grotesquerie and the Baer-Schmeling Baltimore thing won first place in the procession without a struggle. This is because Benny Franklin, Baltimore promoter, proposed that his customers be given a heavyweight extravaganza of 25 rounds. Franklin offered to provide a $100,000 purse for the principals, with Baer getting three-fourths of it.

Mayor Howard W. Jackson told Franklin the stadium would be available for a bout in May.

Franklin has promoted three world championship boxing bouts in Baltimore, Benny Schwartz-Pancho Villa for the flyweight title; Harry Greb-Fay Keiser, middleweight, and Ardre Routis-Buster Brown, featherweight.

To Consider Offer.

Baer is appearing in a Baltimore movie house this week, and he and his manager, Ancil Hoffman, termed the offer "interesting" and promised fullest consideration. But before Franklin could bow himself out of the Baer suite Ancil explained that he had previous engagements which would have to be fulfilled ahead of Baltimore. These, he said, were with Lou Daro, California promoter, who has projected a Baer-Schmeling bout on the coast, and one with Jack Dempsey, promoter at large, who also would like to headline Baer and Schmeling, and also has the West Coast selected as the probable locale.

The Sharkey-Baer program was a mental invention of the above-mentioned Mr. Daro, who, after a day in New York promoting Baer-Schmeling on the coast, went up to Boston to talk terms with Johnny Buckley, manager of Jack Sharkey. Since Buckley is under suspension by the Massachusetts State Boxing Commission, he was unable to talk, except off the record, and referred Daro to Sharkey, himself, who is in Miami.

Is Offered $35,000.

A bout which is entirely possible and which would be a glorious money-maker for all concerned is the Ross-McLarnin affair which Tim Mara wants to put on as a milk fund benefit.

McLarnin has been quoted as being willing to lay his title on the line if he can get $35,000. Mara today telegraphed Pop Foster, Jimmy's manager, an offer guaranteeing that amount. To make it more convincing, Sam Pian and Art Lynch, managers of Lightweight Champion Ross, offered to work on a percentage basis, guaranteeing McLarnin his $35,000.

The McLarnin-Ross fight would be unique in that it would involve champions of two classes—lightweight and welter. It would be held late in May or early in June.

Ross today signed an agreement to fight McLarnin if the welter champ can be brought into line.

Roosevelt Five Baltimore Winner

Defeats Mt. St. Joseph by 33-25 Score; Smith Leads Attack.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Gathering a lead at the outset of the game, which never was relinquished, Roosevelt High School's basket ball team, of Washington, this afternoon avenged a defeat by Mount St. Joseph basketers earlier in the season by winning, 33 to 25.

With Forward Smith leading the offense, the visitors outscored the hosts in every period of the contest, and at the halfway time held an advantage of 4 points, the score standing 18 to 14. Smith garnered a total of 10 points for high honors.

In the game earlier in the season, St. Joe journeyed to Washington and nosed out the Capital five, 26 to 23.

3 Battles Today In Montgomery

Encounter Outside Series Also Is Scheduled.

Action will be confined to upper county courts today as the Montgomery County series teams find three contests on schedule, with an outside encounter also carded.

The Gaithersburg quintet will fight for a place among the leaders, entertaining the Damascus five. Silver Spring looks forward to the game with the Rockville dribblers, who have shown little strength. The Springers need a victory to remain in the running for the title.

Sherwood and Poolesville clash on the latter's court, with both teams counted out of the title race. Each has two defeats.

Bethesda idles in the league, but travels to Frederick, where it will engage the Maryland School for the Deaf five at 8 p. m.

Emerson Trounces Maryland U. Cubs

Emerson Institute whipped the Maryland Frosh at College Park yesterday, 33 to 14. Featuring in the assault on the Baby Terps was Bill Cogar, who flipped six baskets and a foul for 13 points.

The Washington scholastics got off to an early start and at half time held a 15-to-7 lead. Spectacular guarding by the Emerson team held the Maryland yearlings to four field goals.

Knocky Thomas, who has been a member of the Emerson team this season, enrolled yesterday morning at the university and took his place in the line-up against his old team mates. He accounted for 3 points.

Petrolle, Retiring With $200,000, Asserts Battalino Greatest Foe, McLarnin Overrated

Calls Canzoneri Smartest in Class, Ross the Best Boxer.

NEW YORK, Jan 25 (AP).—Uncle Will Petrolle, private citizen, peered through puffed eyes today down the long road back to his start in the fight business just ten years ago.

He was content because his fighting career was over, closed by his own decision, instead of the knockout punches of some fellow who couldn't have carried his water bucket a couples of years ago.

He was lonesome, because he lost his final fight last night to young Barney Ross, lightweight champion, in the Bronx Coliseum, and in the fight business the crowd trails only with the winner. But that only sharpened the philosophy of the homely fellow with the scrambled features who's been "home folks" to everyone in boxing ever since he first gained the limelight.

Glad to Get Out.

"I'm glad to get out of it while I still know East from West, and I don't hear bells that aren't ringing," he said. "I gave the fight game all I had and it gave me all I've got—$200,000 put away, an ornamental iron works in Duluth, a cigar store there, a fine home.

"I quit once before—four years ago—and I came back after a rest because I knew that wasn't the real finish. I proved that it wasn't. This time it is and I know it. The old zip is gone. It had to go some time.

So, with nothing to do but chat, he scaled back over the years and the fights he's had—a roster of lightweight foes that reads like a who's who of boxing for the past decade. He found there ten men to rate the best he had met, and the list was one to surprise you.

He fought many more, of course, but these ten, in that order, were the best of the lot. The man he placed at the top, Battalino, never was much good after Bill knocked him out in 12 of the fiercest, bloodiest rounds New York ever saw, and beat him in ten more in Chicago.

Game and Tough.

"He was the gamest man I ever faced and the toughest," said Will. "He hurt every time he hit you. He was crudely clever, difficult to get at. He was so tough that Canzoneri never would tackle him.

"Tony was the smartest of them all, the cleanest, sharpest puncher, Ross the best boxer. Terris was the fastest thing I ever saw, Miller the hardest hitter. Ross, when he develops a right hand, gets more experience and his full growth, will be the greatest of them all.

"McLarlin, though he beat me twice, was the most overrated. He had 10 pounds on me in weight. He wasn't exactly brave. He was the scourge of small children—Al Singer, Ruby Goldstein, and that kind—and old men, like Benny Leonard."

Billy grinned proudly in the knowledge of a good phrase well turned.

Petrolle's Who's Who Among Lightweights

Billy Petrolle, retiring veteran of the lightweight class, ranks the fighters he has met during the last ten years as a persistent challenger for the title:

1. Christopher (Bi) Battalino, former featherweight champion.
2. Tony Canzoneri, former lightweight champion.
3. Barney Ross, lightweight champion.
4. Ray Miller, Chicago southpaw.
5. Jimmy McLarnin, welterweight champion.
6. King Tut, Minneapolis blonde.
7. Sid Terris, the ghost of New York's ghetto.
8. Justo Suarez, Argentine, whose career he ended.
9. Kid Kaplan, former featherweight champion.
10. Sammy Mandell, former lightweight champion.

Dr. Syntax, 12-1, Wins New Orleans Feature

New Orleans, Jan. 25 (AP).—Over a muddy track, H. A. Coulson's Dr. Syntax, a consistent son of the famous High Time, today defeated ten other platers in the 6-furlong feature at the Fair Grounds.

Ridden by Tommy Vercher, Dr. Syntax took command in the final sixteenth of a mile and just managed to nose out A. G. Tarn's Eisenberg, with T. C. Worden's Le Bruyere third.

The race, run in 1:14 2-5, was strictly a duel between Eisenberg and Le Bruyere, with the former setting the pace, until Dr. Syntax moved into the picture at the head of the stretch. It took one of Vercher's best rides, however, to get the High Time gelding home in front.

Ben Chapmans, Reconciled Last Fall, Seeking Separation

MR. AND MRS. BEN CHAPMAN.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 25 (AP).—Attorneys for Ben Chapman, star New York Yankee outfielder, and his wife, Mary Elizabeth Chapman, with whom he was reconciled last November, today filed a petition for separate maintenance and a property settlement in Jefferson Chancery Court.

The property agreement submitted to Judge William M. Walker, who was credited with being instrumental in the reconciliation last November, stipulated that Chapman would pay his wife $200 a month, convey title in a two-story home to her and also give her an automobile she has been driving since their marriage July 6, 1931.

The reconciliation last fall abruptly terminated Mrs. Chapman's suit for separate maintenance before Judge Walker. During the three-day hearing, both Mrs. Chapman and her husband protested love for each other. Chapman's mother announced the reconciliation several hours after the couple had departed for California on a "second honeymoon."

Filing the suit today was a surprise to all except intimate friends of the couple.

Old Line Five Encounters Virginia

Choice Tonight to Trim Foe Which Has Lost Last Five Games.

Maryland Boxers Will Invade West Point Tomorrow.

DISAPPOINTED by its defeat at the hands of Johns Hopkins two nights ago, Maryland's quintet heads for Charlottesville, where tonight it clashes with the not-so-powerful Cavaliers in a Southern Conference engagement. Maryland's boxers, meanwhile, are to apply the finishing touches to their preparations for tomorrow's invasion of West Point. The squad is to leave late tonight for New York.

Virginia should be easy for the Terrapins. Henry Sturm is the only veteran on the team, which lost its last five games, and the rookies have been unable to find themselves. Sturm has been putting up a sensational game at forward. His record for eight games shows 86 points, an average of 11 a game, but little help has been forthcoming from his teammates.

Orlin Rogers, another forward, has 46 points to his credit, and with Sturm comprises Virginia's chief scoring threat. Dave Marrett, a guard, has 31 points to his credit, and Johnny Murphy, center, 29. Virginia's attack consists principally of long shots, for the men have found difficulty working the ball in close to the bucket.

Maryland should have no trouble in taking the game, but it will have to be more alert than it was against Hopkins. Although trailing by 10 points in the last five minutes of play, the Blue Jays managed to overtake Maryland and win in an extra period. Vic Willis, the Terps' new 6-foot-6-inch center, made an inauspicious debut in the fray, and Rufus Vincent will hold forth at that position tonight.

Maryland's boxers are in fine fine fettle and should give Army a real battle, though the Cadets are favored to win. Harold Burns, who turned up unexpectedly to turn the tide of victory in Maryland's favor against Western Maryland last week, will be in the line-up and is counted an almost certain winner.

Fredericksburg High Wins Second Victory

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—Scoring their second victory of the season, the Fredericksburg High School basket ball team defeated Woodbury Forest School, 30 to 16.

A 14-to-11 intermission lead was increased to an almost 2-to-1 advantage in the second half by the Yellow Jackets, who were led by Dice, a forward, who tallied 13 points.

Mrs. Hendrick, of D. C. Bows at Coral Gables

Coral Gables, Fla., Jan. 25 (Spl.). Mrs. L. H. Hendrick, of Washington, D. C., was eliminated in the semi final round of the women's golf tournament over the Riviera Golf Club course here today. She bowed to Mrs. W. R. B. McLean, of Williamstown, Mass., by 2 and 1 to play.

Miss Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., entered the finals in the title division when she disposed of Miss Kathryn Bragaw, of Orange, N. J., by 4 up and 3 to play. She will oppose Miss Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., daughter of the home professional, tomorrow. Miss Miley trounced Mrs. Lawrence Schwab, of New York, by 6 and 4. Miss Bauer went out in 39 equalling Miss Bragaw's record for the outgoing nine of the local layout, the latter making her mark yesterday.

Spitball Delivery On Its Last Legs

St. Louis, Jan. 25 (AP).—Fourteen years after the spitball was banned by major leagues, the moist delivery is making its last stand in the two big-time circuits.

Burleigh Grimes, the fighting old warhorse, and Red Faber, even older in point of years, are preparing to carry the banner of the spitters into 1934 fast company.

These veterans—Grimes is 41 and Faber is 43—are the sole survivors of 18 hurlers allowed to continue the spitball when the delivery was barred in 1920.

Grimes has spent weeks of preparation for his hoped-for comeback with the St. Louis Cardinals, and the Cards management recently announced he would be given a chance. Faber hopes to continue with the White Sox.

Sports writers express doubt that either of the veterans will survive the current campaign.

Jameson, Bean Advance to Third Round; All Favorites Triumph.

CORAL GABLES, Fla., Jan. 25 (Spl.).—E. C. Jameson and E. H. Bean, both of Washington, D. C., won their second round matches in the annual Miami-Biltmore invitation golf tournament here today without even swinging a club. Jameson won by default from Everett J. Livesay, of Columbus, Ohio, and Bean advanced through a default from A. De Costa, of Philadelphia. Both matches were scheduled to be played in the second division.

Jameson looked forward to his meeting with Livesay, which was to be their second within a week. The Washington golfer was out to gain vengeance for the defeat Livesay administered to him in the final round for the National Left-Handers' Championship last Saturday.

All favorites came through successfully in the title flight. Celeste Durand, 20-year-old Garden City, N. Y., star, disposed of Arnold Minkley, of Cleveland, by 4 up and 2 to play. The co-medalists Curtis Bryan, of Jacksonville, and Bill Wilkenson, of Indianapolis, also advanced. Bryan won by default from J. McCauley, of Chicago, and Wilkenson put out Phil Gale, of New York, by 4 and 3

Durand was 4 up at the turn against Minkley. The latter rallied on the second half, but the New Yorker held to his comfortable lead. Wilkenson won five consecutive holes in the opening nine to turn for home with a 5-hole lead. Gale regained two holes on the return journey, but Wilkenson ended the match with a par 5 on the fifteenth.

Lee Jackson Nips Washington-Lee

Rallies in Final Period to Triumph, 20 to 19.

The Washington and Lee High Generals were defeated by the Lee-Jackson tossers yesterday afternoon on the Ballston floor, 20-19.

During the first two quarters the teams were evenly matched until the last few minutes of play, when the Lee-Jackson boys began a rally and scored 5 points, ending the half and leading the Generals, 13-8.

The Generals came back in the third quarter and scored 6 points to take the lead of 1 point. The Lee-Jackson boys were held scoreless during this period.

With Sabbett scoring 5 points in the last quarter, Lee-Jackson forged to the top again.

Games Today.

Western vs. Central.
Eastern vs. Tech.

Games Tuesday.

Western vs. Tech.
Roosevelt vs. Central.

THE situation along the inter-high school basket ball front is a three-way tie for first place as the teams open up the second portion of the race this afternoon in Tech gym. However, one of the league leading trio will drop out of the running today, and that team looks like Tech.

Shattered by the loss of Al Gillem, wire-haired forward star, and Jim Roland, rosy-cheeked substitute, now in the possession of Doctor Sawbones, because of injuries, McKinley Tech's chances of stopping the high-stepping Eastern quintet is decidedly nil.

Others Under Weather.

Then, too, aside from the loss of these Tech stars, the Maroon and Gray five is very much under the weather. Josh Billings, lanky center, has been hobbling about with a strained ligament, and Reds Daly, flame-topped guard, has been bothered with a heavy cold, that has handicapped him, no end, in his play the past week, although he continued to shine.

Thus the Techs are a little the worse for wear as they stack up against the Lincoln Parkers, the outfit which was trounced, 34-30, in the opening battle of the series—and a surprise at that.

Since Eastern's starting failure, it has been coming along stronger with each game, and aside from that a new sensation crops up with each battle. Harry popped up in the Roosevelt battle; Tom Davis, in the Western struggle, and Dizzy Dean in the Central clash. In the background to the success of these lads, however, is Tommy Nolan, forward and captain, whose generalship of the Eastern team has been outstanding throughout the season.

Nolan Sensational.

Cool and collected, Nolan's feeding the ball to his team mates has been a sensation to behold and he is the real spearhead of the Lincoln Parkers' attack.

The crumbling of Central in the Eastern game Tuesday was a distinct surprise to many, although the heralded opinion favored the Kellymen.

In Bits Keyser, Nau, and a new lad, King Kong Mandes, who has proven a standout of the series, the Central team should have little trouble returning to the form it displayed throughout the first three quarters of the first half of the series. And when the Eastern return bout is staged, the game may turn out entirely different from the first result.

The Western quintet, rated low in the pre-series race, has little to hope for in the game against Sentral today. With Skat Stadtler and Jim Forney missing due to scholastic difficulties, the lone threat that remains is Jimmy Corcoran.

Staney Renamed Coach.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 25 (AP).—Joe Staney, of Roanoke, formerly on the Pittsburgh Pirates' squad, has been appointed coach of the Roanoke College baseball team for his second season.

Clarify Equals Track Record, Wins $2,500 Hialeah Inaugural by 3 Lengths

The Pelican Falters, Is Second

Easy Come Runs Third; Favored Springsteel Finishes Last.

Blessed Event Is Victor by Five Lengths to Set New Mark.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., Jan. 25 (AP).—Touched by the four fairy wands of vision, artistic genius, tropical nature and money (more than $2,000,000 worth), the Miami Jockey Club's matchless Mecca today was the scene of one of the most colorful and highly heralded openings in turf history. For 45 days the kingly sport will prevail in a truly regal setting; Joseph E. Widener's brain child, a tropical paradise, second to none for natural and man-made beauty and modern efficiency.

An awe-inspired crowd of some 20,000 milling and shoving enthusiasts, thousands of whom had paid recreational visits to the garden spots before the meeting opened, paid tribute to the gala occasion under a broiling sun and enjoyed one of the finest winter programs ever offered, headed by the 6-furlong Hialeah Park Inaugural handicap.

Clarify Wins Inaugural.

To Morton L. Schwartz, New York financial magnate, went the honor of being represented by the first feature event winner of the session. Clarify, 4-year-old son of Chatterton, flew the white and brown silks to a smashing, easy triumph, winning by three lengths and equaling Character's track record of 1:10 2-5. Behind this colt a half dozen horses finished all heads apart. J. E. Widener's The Pelican made a valiant try to win, but second was his lot. Then, following right alongside, came Mrs. J. H. Whitney's Easy Come, Mrs. Payne Whitney's Curacao, Gift of Roses, Quel Jeu and Evergold. Feudal Lord and Springsteel completed the field.

Springsteel, heavily weighted favorite, cast a big spell of gloom over many in the throng. The roan gelding broke slowly and never was able to reach contention.

The race was worth $2,160 to the winner. It was Clarify's third straight success, and he paid $8.80.

Opener to Gay Joe.

The festivities started off with a well-earned victory for the 5-to-1 chance, Gay Joe, which was ridden out to the limit by Wayne Wright to score by a length and a half from the sluggish beginning favorite, Flaghorn. Kiltamond relinquished the place by a nose in the last few nods. Gay Joe ran down Escadron in the first half mile. Flaghorn made up ground steadily under Earl Porter, but his move was tardy.

Abner, a juvenile, that could only finish close at Tropical Park, was best of the maiden colts and geldings in the second race. Favorite at $5.80 for $2, the son of The Porter overcame some swerving in the early stages and closing briskly, outfinished Try Sympathy in a hard drive. A half-length separated the pair on the wire, while the newcomer, Alaric, was a green third, four lengths behind.

Crowning Glory Cops.

Fredrick, with Porter up, drew a big play in the third event, but the gelding was lucky to finish second, three lengths behind Crowning Glory. Minton, unable to get through at the far turn, came within a nose of catching Fredrick. Bobby Jones sat snug as Crowning Glory, displaying brilliant speed, outran his field for the entire six furlongs, which he covered in 1:11 flat. Backers of the winner collected $11.80 for $2.

Open Range, backed down to $3.80, made a show of his field in taking the fourth purse by four lengths. Somebody, in J. E. Widener's silks, was second throughout, but the colt never could threaten the flying favorite. Jens Son, one of the lightly regarded starters, showed a creditable effort to land in the picture, a length and a half behind Somebody. Aunt Flor displayed very dull form.

Blessed Event Sets Mark.

Col. Edward Riley Bradley motored down from Palm Beach and had the thrill of seeing his good gelding Blessed Event run a mile in the breath-taking time of 1:35 4-5, to win the sixth race by 5 lengths. This time clipped a fifth of a second from Marmion's track record. Blessed Event, under restraint early, ran over the field when let out a wrap. He paid $5.30. Pre-War beat Stealingaway by a nose for the place.

Earl Porter escaped a shutout by guiding Fleet Flag to a length and a half victory in the last race. Fingal was second, with Raccoon third. Lester Balaski, who rode Fingal, was suspended five days for rough riding and interfering with the winner in the stretch. Fleet Flag paid $9.60.

When the American workmen first went to Panama on the canal construction job, there were no shower baths ready for them. Soon, however, these were installed, and all the workmen tried to get under them as soon as they were completed. Three thousand men took showers on the first day—and all of them were made bald. There was something in the water that caused hair to fall out by the handful.

Dear Al:

I believe we are going to see a whole lot of Apprentice Litzenberger this year. The youngster is long on name, long on courage, long on riding ability and short on weight. Possibly it's a little too early to be calling him a second Westrope, but he goes about his work in a fashion that points to saddle class. Nat Ray, the owner and trainer, holds the contract on the boy and his horse has had much to do with his development. While on the subject of riders it might be well to report that Silvio Coucci is in rare form now. He had a long rest, you know. Although Porter is getting the best of the mounts hereabouts, he's going to have a hard time topping the Greentree rider at this meeting. Yes, I had a winner today.

BILL.

First race—Jack Low has burned up the track in trials, according to the clockers. He is a brother of Jack High, of sprinting fame. Beoff, a Bradleyite breaks off the rail and will be dangerous. Lofty Lady to complete the money picture.

Second race—Migrate and Red Sunset will battle it out for the purse in this abbreviated contest for 2-year-olds. Both are highly recommended youngsters. Jeanne S. for the show money.

Third race—Fancy Flight gets in with the speedsters toting only 101 pounds. This way rigged I see nothing here that will take him. Irene's Bob and Westy Junior are a pair with a lot of hoof and will be ready if the top one makes mistakes.

Fourth race—Miney Myerson has proven that his Charles Town sprinting was no flash in the pan. He goes about his workouts in a businesslike manner and appears capable of defeating this kind. Frederick and Quickly for the place and show.

Fifth race—Mad Frump has a lot of class on this group. Not particularly partial to a mile, but can go well at this route on occasions. He will have Jungle King and Chatmoss to beat.

Sixth race—Sainted appears the best suited of these. A hustling ride will see this colt ahead at the wire, I do believe. Bartering Kate and Jockey Meade may gain the place money. Triangular has been rested. Was well thought of last year. Might be the upsetter.

Seventh race—Resisting has been passed to me as a good thing for tomorrow. Village Vamp gets little weight and is dangerous. Kibitzer for the rest.

G. U. Preps Defeat Bethesda-C. C. Five

Keating Is Star as Winners Triumph, 28 to 19.

Georgetown Prep concluded the first half of its basket ball schedule by trouncing Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School yesterday on the latter's floor, 28-19.

The Hoyette quintet started out fast and at the half held a 16-6 margin, but Harris, substitute forward of the Bethesda team, started some clever shooting, with the result that his team completely outplayed the Garrett Parkers in the second half. Harris carried off scoring honors with 11 points. Tommy Keating was outstanding for Georgetown.

Stocks Finish Unchanged on Lighter Sales

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Stocks dragged a bit today, though motor issues, and those related to their industry, had a good market.

During most of the quieter session prices drifted lower. Traders appeared more cautious about making fresh commitments and there was considerable willingness to accept accrued profits. As the list sagged, however, volume contracted, thus repeating the market's recent tendency toward dullness in periods of reaction.

Extreme losses were reduced or canceled when automotive stocks came forward with fresh strength toward the close.

Averages are Unchanged.

The averages finished unchanged, though of the total issues traded there were more declines than advances. Transactions aggregated 2,276,820 shares, more than a million under Wednesday.

Outside influences on the market did not appear to have been especially prominent. With so active a rally behind it, some traders figured a reaction was due and there may have been some short sellers who were playing for such a development.

Leading shares at one time were off fractional to around a point, though simultaneously certain speculative favorites were showing gains. Among the stronger issues through the day were General Motors, Chrysler, Mack Trucks, Nash, Hudson, Electric Auto-Lite, Bendix, Motor Products, Briggs, Marshall Field, McKesson and Robbins and Moto Meter which had extreme gains up to 2 points.

On Sluggish List.

The rank and file of industrials, as well as utilities and rails, were rather sluggish and fractional net declines proved to be numerous. Santa Fe, Westinghouse and U. S. Smelting finished higher.

Two large corporations, General Motors and Bethlehem Steel, made public preliminary figures on 1933 earnings. Motors, as expected, had a comparatively poor fourth-quarter, making less than its preferred dividend requirements due to delays in new model output, though the year's total equal to $1.72 a common share, compared with 9 cents a preferred share in 1932.

Bethlehem had a profit in the last quarter, its first since the three months ended June 30, 1931. Steel manufacturers experienced a sharp curtailment of business early in the period, but there was brisk specifying toward its close and this was helpful.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Success of New Treasury Offering Is Encouraging, But Continuation of Short-Term Borrowing May Make This Portion of Our Debt Unmanageable.

By Ralph West Robey.

As soon as the terms of the first offering of obligations under the new borrowing program of the Administration were made known it immediately was apparent that the issue would be a success. The offering was $500,000,000, or thereabouts, of 2¼ per cent Treasury notes maturing March 15, 1935, and an equal amount of 1½ per cent Treasury certificates of indebtedness maturing next September 15. The amount represents a net addition to the public debt, there being no maturing obligations that may be offered in exchange.

These rates of interest are decidedly liberal, as measured by the prevailing market rates. Further, because of the short maturities, the paper is especially attractive to banks and institutional investors that are hesitant about putting their funds into long-term obligations. Experts in the New York financial district, accordingly, decided at once that in the case of subscriptions over $10,000 the allotment probably would be not more than 20 per cent and perhaps not more than 10 per cent. In other words, it was concluded that the offering would be so heavily oversubscribed that if one wanted, say, $10,000,000 of the obligations he should pad his subscription and ask for five to ten times this amount.

Reflects a Large Supply Of Funds Available.

Such an oversubscription, from one point of view, and in spite of the padding, is encouraging. It indicates that there is a vast sum in the United States that may be obtained by the Government under certain conditions with which to carry on the great spending program of the Administration.

It is well to remember, nevertheless, that there is an immense difference between the Government borrowing money on short-term paper and borrowing on long-term bonds. In the latter case there is a real test of the credit standing of the Government. This is because such bonds are primarily attractive to those with accumulated savings—savings which it is desired to invest for a long period.

Borrowing on short-term paper, by contrast, does not attract such funds. Rather, such obligations are taken largely by banks with surplus reserves and temporarily unused lending power. To these institutions this type of paper is attractive, because, although the rate is low, it can not decline appreciably in value between the date of purchase and maturity. Further, since the obligations of banks are in dollars, it makes little or no difference whether the dollars in which payment is made at maturity are worth 60 cents or 10 cents. Accordingly, these institutions will continue to buy short-term paper even if it is clear that the financial program of the Government is leading to trouble.

This fact, that short-term borrowing does not provide a test of the credit standing of the Government, is only one side of the picture. Equally important is the effect of such borrowing upon the problem of handling the public debt. In the case of long-term bond issues the obligations find their way into savings portfolios and there is no cause to worry about maturities and refunding.

With short-term borrowing there is an everlasting stream of maturities. Week after week the Treasury has to make a call upon the banking system. If the deficit is continuing to mount, as is planned for the next many months, such a call involves getting the banks not only to exchange their maturing obligations for the new paper, but as well to take an additional amount.

The net result, thus, is that week by week the Government's financial program is subjected to the loan and investment policies of the banking system. If the banks continue to take the paper, the program runs along smoothly. On the other hand, if on one of the calls the subscriptions fail to provide the necessary funds, the whole structure falls like a house of cards.

While it is encouraging to have the first offering under the new program a success, therefore, it is regrettable that the Administration felt it necessary to borrow only on short-term paper. The total amount of such paper outstanding already is too large. If another $8,000,000,000 is added to it, this portion of our public debt may become unmanageable.

Bank of England.

London, Jan. 25 (A.P.).—The weekly statement of the Bank of England shows the following changes, in pounds: Total reserve increased 1,661,000; circulation decreased 1,625,000; bullion increased 36,000; other securities decreased 2,326,000; public deposits decreased 6,551,000; other deposits increased 2,877,000; notes reserve increased 1,625,000; government securities decreased 2,978,000.

The proportion of the bank's reserve to liability is 52.15 per cent, compared with 50.06 last week. Rate of discount, 2 per cent.

Wool Markets.

Boston, Jan. 25 (A.P.) (U. S. Department of Agriculture).—Interest continued in the finer grades of territory and Texas wools, but the volume of sales was smaller than last week. Sales of 64s and finer territory wools in original bags, containing a good percentage of strictly combing staple, were reported at 84@85 cents scoured basis. Average French combing 64s and finer territory wools were quoted at 82@84 cents scoured basis with the short French combings and clothing wools bringing mostly 79@81 cents.

Bond Market Is Unchanged At 81.2 Level

U. S. Loans at Standstill; Trading Volume Cut to $16,501,000.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—The bond market shuffled about in restricted territory today and prices, generally, did not get very far in any direction.

Moderate declines and gains were about even and the trading volume was sharply reduced. The average for 60 domestic corporate bonds was unchanged at 81.2 and sales totaled only $16,501,000, par value, against $19,711,000 yesterday.

U. S. Government securities were virtually at a standstill in the listed section, which is usual following a large new Government offering. Heavy oversubscription of the latest billion-dollar offering of notes and certificates was a foregone conclusion.

Offering of Notes.

Dealers and other large subscribers to the new issues were disposed to stand aside until the announcement of allotments is made. There were only about $700,000 of listed Government transfers, although the majority of Liberties and Treasuries were slightly higher.

Trading in the new Treasury loans over the counter on a "when issued" basis found both the 1½s and 2½s bringing a small premium. Advance bids ranged from 2-32ds to 10-32ds above par.

In the corporation divisions there were a number of scattered advances. The semispeculative carrier liens, however, were inclined to sag under profit taking. The more active transportation gainers of 1 or 2 or more points included some issues of Bangor & Aroostook, Central Pacific, Cuba Railroad, Hudson & Manhattan and Reading.

Among Outstanding Loans.

Among outstanding utility and industrial loans were American Waterworks 5s and 6s, up 1¼ and 2¼ points, respectively; Armour 5½s, up 1; McKesson 5½s, up 1⅜; New Orleans Public Service 5s of 1952 and 1955, up 1¼ and 2¾, respectively; North American Edison 5½s, up 2; Postal Telegraph 5s, up 1; Pure Oil 5½s, up 1; Rochester Gas 5s, up 1, and Western Union 5s of 1951, up 1.

Strength of South American bonds was a feature of the foreign department.

Loans of Argentina, Cuba, Brazil, Buenos Aires and Peru advanced 1 to 2 or more points, apparently reflecting further satisfaction with Washington's recognition of the new Cuban government. Loans of Australia, Austria, France, Germany and Dutch East Indies were off 1 to around 3.

Reading Road Income Rises To $1,096,936

Frisco Railway Advances Profit to $63,499; Loss Overcome.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Net railway operating income of the Reading Co. for December was $1,096,936, against $1,084,946 in the same month of 1933.

The St. Louis-San Francisco System reports December net railway operating income of $63,499, contrasted with deficit of $14,647 in the previous year.

Net income of $725,257, equal to 15 cents a share, was reported by the Teck-Hughes Gold Mines, Ltd., for the quarter ended November 30. This compares with $774,749 in the same quarter of 1932.

Net earnings of the General Motors Corporation for 1933, announced today by Alfred P. Sloan, president, amounted to $83,214,000 equivalent, after preferred dividends, to $1.72 per share on the common stock. This compared with a net of $165,000, or 9 cents a preferred share, in 1932.

The company's fourth quarter was its worst of the year, due partly to halting operations which were affected by delays in getting the 1934 models into production. This quarter, however, as indicated by the reported nine months' figures, showed a net profit of $1,804,206 against a deficit in the same 1932 quarter of $10,390,196.

Philip Morris Consolidated, Inc., a holding company, reports net earnings of $243,204 for 1933, equal to 32 cents a class "A" share, compared with $415,173, or 67 cents a share in 1932.

American Agricultural Chemical Co. reports net loss of $141,440 for the December quarter, compared with loss of $408,986 in the same period of 1932. For the six months ended December 31, loss was $373,349, against $762,118 in the like interval of the previous year.

The board of directors of the Tide Water Oil Co. today declared regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 on the company's issued and outstanding 5 per cent cumulative convertible preferred stock, payable February 15, 1934, to stockholders of record at the close of business February 2, 1934.

An extra dividend of 10 cents a share and regular quarterly payment of 50 cents a share were ordered by directors of Bristol Myers Co. Both are payable March 1 to stock of record February 15. Three months ago a similar extra was paid and an initial quarterly dividend of 50 cents was disbursed.

With a pronounced gain in business in the latter half of the year more than offsetting a decline in the early part of 1933, the Shawinigan Water & Power Co. reports gross operating revenue for the 12 months ended December 31, 1933, of $10,827,575, compared with $10,773,458 for 1932. The company ended the year with a surplus, after payment of dividends but subject to 1933 income tax, of $1,234,813, compared with a surplus of $888,098 at the end of the preceding year.

Wilmington, Del., Jan. 25 (AP).—The E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.'s preliminary report for the quarter ended December 31, 1933, shows the company earned $1.02 a share on its common stock.

This figure, which includes dividends from its General Motors investment equivalent to 45 cents on each share of du Pont common stock, compares with earnings of 95 cents a share for the third quarter of 1933.

Western Pacific Railroad Co. today reported its 1933 net railway operating income increased to $905,827 from $518,116 in 1932.

December showed operating net of $93,110, compared with a red ink figure of $71,984 in December, 1932.

Operating revenues for the year were $10,868,312, a gain of $99,599 over 1932. Operating expenses were cut $213,615 to a total of $8,818,306. Tax accruals amounted to $851,194, and net paid out for equipment rents was $472,123.

Cotton Losses Overcome by Trade Buying

March Closes at 11.11 as Market Is 1 Point Down to 1 Up.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Declines of 14 or 15 points, which carried most deliveries into new low ground for the reaction, were followed by recoveries in cotton today on trade buying and covering. May contracts, after selling off to 11.11, or 14 points net lower, rallied to 11.27 and closed at 11.25, with the general market closing very steady, net 1 point lower to 1 point higher.

The opening was barely steady at a decline of 6 to 8 points in response to relatively easy Liverpool cables, liquidation and foreign selling.

There was sufficient trade buying and covering to cause bulges of a few points right after the call, but liquidation continued and prices worked gradually lower late in the morning with March selling off to 10.97 and July to 11.27, or about 50 to 56 points below the recent high levels.

Trade Buying Increases.

Trade buying increased around the 11-cent mark for March, and prices recovered about 15 to 16 points from the lowest in the late trading. Closing quotations were within a point or more of the best.

Trading in the current January position ended at midday, and after selling off to 10.97 early, that delivery rallied to 11.03 in the late forenoon. Trade interests were buyers of near months again today, and there were reports that the decline in prices had brought in a little more spot inquiry from both domestic and foreign sources.

Very little Southern selling was reported here during the day. Exports today, 24,082, making 4,822,150 so far this season. Port receipts, 10,664. United States port stocks, 3,863,417.

Trade Trends.

(Associated Press.)

Steel—Producers of carbon steel have reduced quotations 1¾ to 4 cents a pound in the high-grade lines, according to the American Iron & Steel Institute. Small tonnages of scrap steel have been reported sold in the Chicago market at $11 a ton, up 25 cents from the previous sale.

Gasoline—Official approval of the oil stabilization plan has resulted in a firmer trend in the Midwest spot gasoline market, the trade has been informed. Prices have been marked up ¼ to ⅜ cents a gallon and some sellers have withdrawn offerings pending further study of the new marketing principles.

Chemicals—Glycerin handlers report a fair demand with prices holding the higher levels recently established. Firmness also prevails in most markets for fertilizer materials in response to an increasing inquiry.

Carpet Wools—Imports at Philadelphia last week totaled 507,292 pounds, against 793,125 in the preceding week.

Silk—Another advance of 1 cent a yard has been posted by sellers of silk crepes for printing. Sheer fabrics in rayon also show a strong tone.

Treasury's Notes Quoted at Premium

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Dealt in on a "when issued" basis, the new Treasury notes and certificates were quoted at premiums over par today.

The total offering of $1,000,000,000, divided equally between the 1½ per cent certificates maturing in 7½ months, and 2½ per cent Treasury notes, maturing in 13½ months, was subscribed 3½ times over.

Dealers in U. S. Government bonds reported a quotation of $100.06-$100.12 per $100 par value for the 1½ per cent certificates, and $100.30-$100.36 for the notes. On the offered prices the indicated yields are 1.30 per cent on the certificates and 2.16 per cent on the notes.

$629,671 Made By Bethlehem Steel Plants

Profit Compares With Loss of $283,097 During Previous Period.

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Bethlehem Steel Corporation today reported a profit of $629,671 for the quarter ended December 31, compared with a loss of $283,097 in the third quarter of 1933 and loss of $5,621,672 in the final quarter of 1932, after all expenses, including interest and provision for depletion and depreciation.

Operations of the corporation and its subsidiaries, after ordinary costs of manufacture, resulted in total income of $5,790,123, against $4,879,146 in the September 30 quarter and operating loss of $586,937 in the last quarter of 1932.

The preliminary report for 1933 showed a total deficit of $8,735,729, compared with a deficit of $19,404,431 in 1932.

Sales and Earnings.

Gross sales and earnings for 1933 aggregated $121,745,344, compared with $98,467,226 in the previous year. New business booked last year amounted to $158,861,156, against $87,388,870 in 1932. Orders on hand December 31, 1933, totaled $67,684,749, against $72,155,458 at September 30, 1933, and $30,568,937 at December 31, 1932.

Operations averaged 20.8 per cent of capacity during the fourth quarter against 40.8 per cent in the third quarter and 13 per cent during the December quarter in 1932. The average for the whole year was 28 per cent against 16.9 per cent for the previous year. Current operations are at approximately 30 per cent of capacity.

Cash and liquid securities on December 31 amounted to $46,888,841 against $46,975,589 at the close of 1932. Cash expenditures for additions and improvements to properties last year were $2,045,669, compared with $2,297,340 in 1932.

First Profit Since '31.

The final quarter of last year brought the corporation its first profit since the second quarter of 1931.

Eugene G. Grace, president of Bethlehem, said the cleaning-up of contracts at the year-end resulted in favorable adjustments which helped the company's showing.

"Our export business," Grace said, "has been gradually picking up in the last year. We did about 25 per cent more export business in 1933 than in 1932."

Rail business has been "very disappointing," Grace asserted. Some orders have developed, but the total is not up to the tonnage exported.

There was a reduction in the corporation's employment during the fourth quarter, Grace said, partly due to the failure of rail business to materialize, but he had no figures on the amount of the decrease.

Trappers Find Muskrat Catch Is Satisfactory

Chestertown, Md., Jan. 25 (Spl). In spite of prophecies that the present muskrat season on the Eastern Shore, opening January 1 and closing March 15, would be slack because it was believed summer storms had killed whole litters of young rats, buyers covering the entire Delmarva Peninsula assert the season bids fair to be one of the best in recent years.

In the first week in Kent County a buyer, purchasing pelts brought here from outlying sections, took 600 skins at from 75 to 80 cents for brown hides and from $1.35 to $1.40 for blacks. White skins are so scarce that no attempt is made to sell them at their market value, when caught, but they are often thrown in with the black pelts.

It is believed one of the bumper seasons for "marsh rabbit" pelts is at hand and that hundreds of thousands of dollars will change hands between trappers and buyers for city markets before the season wanes. Though the majority of skins go to New York and other large cities, one manufacturer in Dorchester County is said to be successfully turning hides into Hudson seal fur in the manner of the city manufacturers and furriers.

Many unemployed are taking advantage of the opportunity, it is reported, to make money during the present flush season by trapping the little marsh animals, and veteran trappers who make a regular living at the business are said to be delighted at the turn of events.

A buyer who covers the entire Delmarva Peninsula pointed out this week that the three Delaware counties usually turn out more muskrats than the nine Eastern Shore counties, in relation to the size of the territory, and that this season is no exception. The two Virginia Eastern Shore counties also are getting their share of pelts, it is said.

Power Production Gains 9.5 Per Cent

New York, Jan. 25 (AP).—Output of electric power last week was 9.5 per cent ahead of the same week last year against a 10.1 per cent gain in the previous week, according to figures reported today by the Edison Electric Institute.

The outturn amounted to 1,624,848,000 kilowatt hours compared with 1,646,271,000 in the preceding week and 1,484,089,000 for the same week last year. The moderate recession from the previous week was in accord with the trend of last year and the year before for this period.

In the New England area the output was up 10 per cent against a gain of 9.2 per cent for the week before; Middle Atlantic, up 9.3 against 8.6; Central Industrial, up 13 against 13.1; West Central, up 8.8 against 8.8; Southern States, up 7.7 against 10.4; Rocky Mountain, up 18.2 against 19.8; Pacific Coast, up 2 against 3.5.

Radio Waves and Ripples

IT may have required no end of deliberation, argument, even a little browbeating of stubborn ones, but in the end WJSV knew what to do when it came to deciding between the Prince of Wales and the Washington Advertising Club.

Columbia had scheduled the prince in a talk from London from 12:30 to 1:30 tomorrow afternoon. The Ad Club was giving a preauto show luncheon at the same time with an impressive line-up of speakers it wanted to put on the air—for instance, Senator Tydings and Senator Capper.

WJSV decided in favor of the Ad Club, which is a thing all civic-minded persons will appreciate.

WJSV may well have reasoned that the Ad Club and Senators Tydings and Capper are close at hand and could be bothersome in one way or another. But the prince, 'way off there in London, poof!

Whitecaps.

WRC—"April in Paris," a hit tune from "Walk a Little Faster," by the orchestra, Jessica Dragonette to sing "Sweethearts," "No Me-Lo-Digas" and "Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal," 8 p. m.; Maude Adams in a full-length production of "Rosemary," 9:30 p. m.

WMAL—"Need for Reform in the NRA," Senator Nye, 10:30 p. m.; Paul Whiteman, Ted Weems and others in an hour program welcoming Buddy Rogers and his music back on the air, 11:30 p. m.

WJSV—Earthquake in India, the decline of Tammany, crime, March of Time, 8:30 p. m.; Dorothy Parker with Alexander Woolcott, 9:15 p. m.

Receipt of an executive order quoted in part below was responsible for considerable WRC fun and an exchange of letters with the New York office yesterday.

"Eighty - seven - year - old George Gitt, who heard Abraham Lincoln deliver his immortal Gettysburg address through a crack in the platform floor,' will be interviewed by Writ Barnitz."

The letter from New York suggested that the quotation marks around "through a crack in the platform floor" be removed, and everyone stopped laughing.

Gen. Johnson probably doesn't know it, but a couple of stenographers, a hostess and an office boy at WRC went into a studio and worked as sound effects for Mrs. Pennyfeather yesterday.

Washington radio officials admit refusing Judge Rutherford time on the air for "religious" talks, as set forth in a petition signed by 20,000 and submitted to Representative Mary Norton, chairman of the House District Committee.

They charge the judge with wanting to fight a religious war via radio. Transcriptions of his talks and his manuscripts indicate his strong desires to assail certain leaders.

Furthermore, say the broadcasters, Judge Rutherford wanted to pay for his air time and the networks refuse to accept compensation for airing religious programs, a policy to which Washington stations adhere rather closely.

There is a ray of hope to be seen by those with eyes to see it in the fact that the first movie to be reproduced by Columbia for the opening of the "Forty-Five Minutes in Hollywood" series tomorrow night is non-musical. Perhaps Hollywood has gone back to filming drama without saying anything to anyone. The deficiency will be remedied with Mark Warnow's orchestra, but that's not important. That's radio.

"Miss Fane's Baby Is Stolen," played on the screen by Dorothea Wieck, Leslie Howard and Alice Brady, will be put on the air by Marion Hopkinson, Peggy Allenby, Porter Hall and Fred Uttal. The Lindbergh kidnaping appears to have furnished the plot.

Paul Whiteman, Ted Weems and Jack Denny welcome Buddy Rogers back on the N. B. C. chain tonight in a special one-hour broadcast starting at 11:30 o'clock on WMAL . . . Helen Pickens, of N. B. C.'s Pickens Sisters, married Salvatore M. Curioni in New York the other day . . . Curioni, an Italian air ace during the war, is an engineer. . . Columbia will broadcast another Portland Junior Symphony concert a week from tomorrow from midnight until 12:30 a. m. . . . two enterprising young men, Palmer Brink and Roger Shields, are looking for radio sustaining artists here who need managers . . . they open an artists' bureau on Seventeenth street Monday and they would like very much to do some business . . . Shields & Brink, Inc., it'll be . . . Fred East, one of Washington's hardest working barytones, has been signed by WJSV as a regular Friday feature on the Woman's Hour . . . WJSV is picking up Ben Turpin, Eddie Quillan, Jack Mulhall, Roscoe Ates and a lot of Hollywood entertainment that is being sent here as a build-up for "Moulin Rouge," from the stage of the Palace next Friday.

District Man Shares In $225,297 Estate

Public bequests totaled more than $160,000, $11,000 going to the trustees of Princeton University. Two cousins, John L. Dewitt, 1731 Connecticut avenue, Washington, D. C., and Wallace Dewitt, of Erie, Pa., shared equally in the residue.

Taxes.

Another British castle has closed its ancient door; the owner couldn't wrastle with hard luck any more: he sold his battleaxes, his lance and flowing bowl to pay the last year's taxes, and still he's in the hole. The castle is historic, beneath its rooftree gray the kids took paregoric in good King Richard's day, and down succeeding ages it's been the calm retreat of statesmen, bards and sages, there queens were known to meet; and stately ghosts and specters walked down its tufted floors before the tax collectors came down to shut its doors. The castle had its glory throughout a thousand years, its strange romantic story in monkish scrolls appears; there dauntless knights were tilting and playing deadly games and minstrels blithe were lilting their love songs to the dames. It stands with the reflectors of chivalry of old; and now the tax collectors have got their deadly hold. This castle on the blink went, with others old and gray; the taxes are delinquent, the owners can not pay. The stately homes of Britain, of which the poets speak, behold their glories flittin', they close one every week. It is a theme for rectors and pastors to advance, how modern tax collectors have ruined old romance.

Freak Hands.

Freak hands always present to the holder and his partner most difficult problems in bidding and the catastrophes which follow in the wake of such holdings because the partners choose the wrong methods of exchanging information are among the greatest at the contract table.

Mr. H. J. Lewin, of Cincinnati, Ohio, recounts a rather harrowing experience which he had in a rubber game recently in his home town. His side was vulnerable and there was no score on the rubber game when his partner, who was North, opened the bidding with two spades. The East player passed and Mr. Lewin looked at the remarkable holding below, opposite a Forcing bid of two in a suit:

Spades	—
Hearts	A 10 5
Diamonds	A Q 10 8 6 4
Clubs	A Q 5 4

Mr. Lewin remarked that it appeared to him that he and his partner held all the honor-tricks. Naturally, being void of spades he did not wish the hand played at that denomination so he responded to the Opening Force with a bid of four notrump, a quite conservative bid with his four honor-tricks. His partner then bid seven spades, which East promply doubled. Mr. Lewin again paused and took stock of the situation. He reasoned that North must hold the Ace and King of spades, the King and Queen of hearts and the King-Knave of both clubs and diamonds, one of the latter of threee cards in length. Otherwise he felt that North could not have made the bid he did make. Thus reasoning, Mr. Lewin concluded that North must have a spade suit of six, probably headed by the Ace-King-Queen and that East was holding the guarded Knave. This, he felt, was not an improbable situation considering his own void in the suit. If this reasoning was correct, then the seven-spade bid was sure to be defeated, while the seven notrump contract appeared to him a certainty. He took out the spade contract with seven notrump, and when the Dummy went down, it was as follows:

Spades	A K Q J 9 7 6 5 4 3
Hearts	8
Diamonds	—
Clubs	J 2

Needless to add, the hand ended disastrously and caused much argument. North contended that South had no right to disturb his Slam bid in spades. Mr. Lewin countered that his partner's Opening bid of two had completely misled him as to the character of his holding and that under the circumstances his Takeout was justified. If he had made any other Opening bid, South said, the partnership would inevitably have reached the contract of seven spades and then, no matter what East did, South would have known that the hand must be played in spades.

This, in brief, is the bone of contention, and I must admit there is some merit on both sides. Obviously North's Opening bid should not be two spades. With his freak holding there is not the slightest danger that the hand will be passed out. There remained to be distributed among the three remaining hands five honors in hearts, five honors in diamonds and four honors in clubs. The fact of the length in spades in the North hand clearly indicates that some other hand will have distributional values that would suggest a bid even on minimum honor holdings, so North had a splendid alternative of a pass as his Opening call. However, taking this situation as it existed, Mr. Lewin's honor holding of four honor-tricks opposite a Forcing two-bid should rather serve to put him on notice that if there is something "rotten in the state of Denmark" there is also something slightly fishy about the Opening bid of two. In other words, it must have been based largely on distribution rather than a balanced holding with a maximum of honor-tricks. I think Mr. Lewin had a better bid available than four notrump and that was the bid of three diamonds, disclosing another biddable suit and possibly making the way to the correct final contract much more discernible to his partner.

However, granted that the four notrump bid was made, now again North had no need to hurry. The hand is certainly not going to be dropped short of a Slam with such a tremendously encouraging response, and North could well have been content to bid merely five spades. But, with the bidding as it actually occurred, I am inclined to think that Mr. Lewin should have passed. His partner's bid of two spades, then seven spades, is certainly as sound a guarantee as any Bridge player can make that his trump suit is absolutely solid, that his only losers can be in other suits, and these it is apparent that North feels will be taken care of by the bid of four notrump. Of course, it is true that South could have bid four notrump on much less honor strength, but in any event I feel that the hand should finally have been played at seven spades rather than seven notrump. Whether North opens the bidding or not, at some point he must take charge of the hand and find a bid that will convince his partner that it should be played in spades, even though he is void of that suit. The bidding might go:

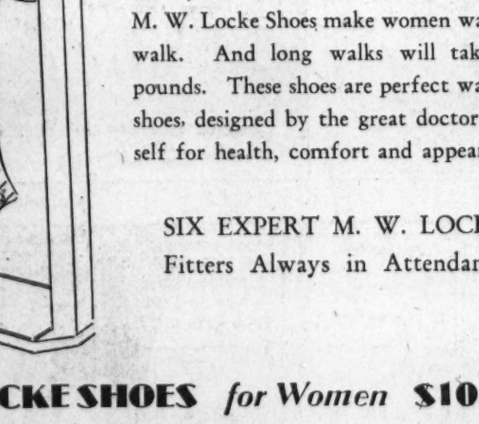
North	South
Pass	1♢
6♠	7♢ or 7♠

If North, after passing, jumps to a Small Slam with his holding, certainly South, even though void of spades, can bid for the Grand Slam.

Tomorrow's Hand.

South is Declarer at six clubs, and West opens a heart. Can the contract be made?

South, Dealer
Neither side vulnerable.



The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article

His topic will be "Youth Marches On."

For three summers he was director of boys' work with the Chicago District Golf Association, which employs 7,000 caddies, during which time he developed the classified plan now in use in most golf courses in America.

His personal experience includes work in the coal mines of Pennsylvania for three years while he was 11, 12 and 13 years of age. Several years ago he made a study of the child labor situation in cotton mills of the South.

The program also will include an address by Sir Willmott Lewis, Washington correspondent of the London Times; the presenting of silver beaver awards to George Hewitt Myers, Thomas A. King and Edward H. Lyles; the report of the council president, Capt. Chester Wells, and of the Scout executive, Linn C. Drake.

The silver beaver leadership emblem will be awarded to three Scouters at the annual council meeting Monday. The emblems will be awarded to George Hewitt Myers, commissioner and treasurer of the council; Edward H. Lyles, scoutmaster of Troop 51, and Thomas A. King, scoutmaster of Troop 69.

Mr. Myers, a member of the executive board since 1925, has served as council treasurer for six years and as scout commissioner since June, 1931. Citation of Mr. Myers' leadership the executive board cites him for promoting interest in the development of camps, in the success of the training program, the courts of honor, and the scoutmaster organization.

Edward H. Lyles, scoutmaster of Troop 51 since 1925, is cited as "the inspiration of a host of boys who have come under his influence not only in Troop 51, but in the service he has rendered in court of honor and review to the boys of all of Washington."

Thomas A. King, scoutmaster for the last 12 years, also has served as assistant deputy commissioner, as assistant district commissioner, and as field scout commissioner for the promotion of first aid. For many years he has rendered devoted service in court of honor and court of review work. He is cited particularly for marshaling and directing scouts in troops in good turn accomplishments. He and his troop have had charge of the maintenance of order and the distribution of Christmas baskets at the Salvation Army.

Democrats Gag Senate, Money Bill Passes Today

Debate Limited After Glass Amendments Are Defeated.

Full Power Sure For Morgenthau

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Demonstrating their mastery over the Senate by easily defeating two major restrictive amendments to the gold revaluation bill, the Democratic leaders late yesterday forced acceptance of a time limitation on debate, beginning today, to assure adoption of the measure before nightfall.

By a tally of 36 to 54, the Senate voted down a proposal that the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund be placed in the hands of a five-man board instead of under the sole direction of the Secretary of the Treasury as provided in the bill.

A short time later the Senate rejected, 32 to 50, a proposal to restrict the Secretary of the Treasury in his use of the fund to the "sole purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar in relation to the currencies of foreign governments." The words "sole" and "in relation to the currencies of foreign governments" constituted the amendment.

Proposed by Glass.

Administration spokesmen combatted this amendment on the ground that the Secretary should be free to stabilize the value of the dollar at home as well as abroad. It was contended by the opposition that without the restrictive phrase the fund could be used to deal in commodities and domestic securities and as a device to bring about the much-discussed "commodity dollar" or managed currency.

Both rejected amendments originally were proposed by Senator Carter Glass (Republican), of Virginia, and were approved by 12 to 8 votes by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. Defeat of the amendments, Senator Glass said, gave the Secretary of the Treasury all the powers of a central bank.

As soon as the Senate disposed of the two Glass amendments, Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, offered his silver purchase amendment. Earlier in the day Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, announced he would offer an amendment permitting the Treasury to issue silver certificates against the silver bullion it now holds.

Debate Is Limited.

The Wheeler amendment would require the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver at the rate of not less than 50,000,000 ounces monthly until he had acquired 1,000,000,000 ounces or until the price of silver in the open market was one-sixteenth the price of gold.

Foreseeing a prolonged fight over this amendment, Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson asked unanimous consent—for limiting debate

Wilhelm Rallies Kin for Birthday

Doorn Assumes New Life for Festive Day.

Doorn, The Netherlands, Jan. 26 (AP).—Relatives of Wilhelm II flocked to Doorn tonight in anticipation of the seventy-fifth birthday anniversary tomorrow of the former German emperor.

This village, whose population has increased 30 per cent since the imperial woodchopper took up his residence here in 1919, was in a festive mood—its eating places and garages were doing a large-scale business; the villagers were gladdened by gifts of food and kindling, and everyone noted with satisfaction that Wilhelm, who has been laid up with rheumatism, is again taking his customary daily stroll through the village, in high spirits.

The former crown prince and the 85-year-old Field Marshal Von Mackensen, one of Germany's most brilliant war-time leaders, are to be among the guests tomorrow.

Traylor Recovery Slow but Steady

Banker Sleeps, Eats Well; Doctors Optimistic.

Chicago, Jan. 26 (AP).—Slow but steady improvement in the condition of Melvin A. Traylor was reported today by physicians who have attended the First National Bank president constantly since he became ill with pneumonia more than a week ago.

Traylor today ate the largest meal since his illness became serious. He slept well through the night still under an oxygen tent. Today his heart action was good and the doctors felt he would pass the crisis soon.

Chains Break Gang Bravado Of Dillinger

Tucson, Ariz., Jan. 26 (AP).—Chained together in a row, the leader and three members of the Dillinger gang lost their attitude of defiance today under the sharp orders of a justice of the peace, who set their fugitive bonds at $100,000 each.

John Dillinger, the outlaw chief and last of the four seized here last night, dropped the bravado that characterized the first few hours of his captivity. He attempted to deny his identity, but became meek when yanked to his feet by a policeman on the court's order.

Wanted for a series of murders and bank robberies in the Middle West, as well as a penitentiary break in Indiana and a jail delivery in Ohio, Dillinger and his henchmen, Harry Pierpont, asserted "trigger man;" Russell Clark and Charles Makley, were left without benefit of legal counsel, put rapidly through the arraignment and clapped back in jail while Midwestern authorities moved to return them.

Women Fare Better.

The three women arrested with the gangsters, identified as Anna Martin, Opal Long and Mary Kinder, fared better, as they were allowed to walk free to and from the court of Justice C. V. Budlong.

However, Anna Martin, first placed under $500 bond as a material witness, later was ordered back into court to be held under $100,000 bail for Illinois authorities as a fugitive on a murder charge.

Miss Long was held in lieu of a $5,000 bond on charges of obstructing an officer during the arrests. The Kinder woman was held under bail of $500 as a material witness.

A cordon of officers surrounded the group as they went to court. Miss Long and the men concealed their faces as news cameras clicked.

As Budlong called the name

Hitler Signs 10-Year Peace With Poland

Amity Based on Kellogg Pact Aimed to Solve Border Disputes.

Berlin, Jan. 26 (AP).—A ten-year pact of friendship and nonaggression, which diplomatic circles called one of the most important treaties in recent European history, was signed here today by Poland and Germany.

It was regarded here as a move to eliminate definitely all boundary questions of the two powers and was taken as an indication that the government of Chancellor Hitler feels certain and secure in its position.

France, an ally of Poland, was notified of various steps taken in the preliminary negotiations leading to the conclusion of the agreement. It was announced with startling suddenness.

Modeled after the Kellogg nonaggression pact, which both Germany and Poland signed, the treaty marks a new step in the Hitler regime's foreign policy through direct negotiations instead of cumbersome conferences.

Since Germany has a similar treaty with Russia, it was thought the Russian foreign office will welcome this rapprochement of the two western neighbors.

Under the terms of the accord questions of minorities and other problems pending between Poland and Germany will be handled through negotiations rather than through the medium of the League of Nations, on which Germany turned her back last fall.

The Polish legation in Berlin described the conclusion of the agree-

2 Wealthy Sisters Die Within Hour

Palm Beach, Fla., Jan. 26 (AP).—Two wealthy sisters, founders of the Darrah & Darrah silversmith firms of Florida and the East, died within an hour today at their adjoining homes here.

The younger, Mrs. Ernesto Fabri, 43, died this morning after returning from Florence, Italy, where she had spent three years trying to regain her health.

Father Sought as Kidnaper Of Liggett Grandchildren

Chicago, Jan. 26 (AP).—Mrs. Margaret Liggett Willits, of the drug chain family, has a court order for the custody of her two children and a kidnaping warrant for the arrest of her former husband, but John MacGregor Willits and their two little daughters—Jane, 6, and Anne, 2—were missing tonight.

His disobedience of Judge Sabath's decree also brought Willits a threat of punishment for contempt of court.

Mrs. Willits' attorney tried to learn from a friend who appeared for Willits whether he had fled to Mexico, but the answer was indefinite.

Augustus de Lattre, grain broker, said:

"Willits was very upset and appeared to be in great stress. He didn't tell me where he has gone."

Was it to Mexico? De Lattre was asked.

"I presume he has gone to some place where it is warm," he said. "Willits is a good father and will take care of the children."

Judge Sabath, in rejecting Willits' petition to regain custody of his children last Tuesday, had ordered him to return them to Mrs. Willits today. Instead, he disappeared. The court threatened to issue a contempt citation, but on De Lattre's urgent plea the hearing was extended to Wednesday. If Willits returns then, the contempt charges will be dropped. De Lattre said Willits had little money and could not have gone far.

The couple were divorced last month, Mrs. Willits obtaining custody of the children and immediately taking them to Swampscott, Mass., her family home. Willits followed, and brought them back allegedly when his former wife was not looking. He went before Judge Sabath and accused her of being an unfit mother, but the court refused to let him keep the children, although Mrs. Willits was ordered to stay in Cook County and give the insurance man the youngsters for two summer months and one day a week the rest of the year.

'That's Him!' Factor Cries At Kidnaper

Torture, Threats, Prayer Recounted; Hemmed by Bodyguards.

Chicago, Jan. 26 (AP).—John (Jake the Barber) Factor told to a jury today a lurid story of his kidnaping, and three times he stepped down from the witness stand to point dramatically at a defendant as one of the men who imprisoned, kicked, cursed, beat and threatened him for 12 days last July until $70,000 ransom was paid.

First he pointed to Albert Kator, of whom he said:

"I saw him when the blindfolds over my eyes were being changed and I'd never forget him."

Then he indicated Gustav Schaefer, and said:

Sees Touhy, "That's Him!"

At last he came to Roger Touhy, youthful-appearing former telegraph operator, who became a beer runner and then head of the Touhy gang.

With arm outstretched, lips quivering and voice breaking, Factor said:

"That's him!"

He referred to the man who, he said, stood partly concealed by a blanket and directed him to write a note to Mrs. Factor, urging her to use every possible effort to obtain $200,000 ransom.

A dramatic moment came when Factor said that early in his captivity, one of the abductors asked him, when he, terrified, started to pray:

"Why are you praying to God? Your life belongs to me."

When Factor's story had ended—a story which lawyers and court attaches said was unrivalled for drama in the history of the Chicago Criminal Courts—there remained only one defendant who had not been definitely identified in the State's attempt to send all four to the electric chair.

He was Thomas McFadden, known also as "Father McFadden," bald, beatific, bespectacled man of past 60 years. Prosecutors said further evidence would link him with the crime.

Guards Fill Court.

Factor had been expected to identify only one defendant, and him only by his voice. His testimony was given under a heavy guard. There were his own bodyguards in the courtroom, two detectives holding him in custody pending extradition to England for an alleged $7,000,000 stock fraud, and eight deputies assigned to watch over the defendants.

Twice Factor's voice broke into sobs as he told of being tortured and threatened with death "or worse."

Even after he had been released, Factor said, the kidnapers hounded him with telephone threats against his family for payment of $50,000, which he had promised to pay in addition to the $70,000. Those threats became most persistent, he said, at a time Touhy gangsters reportedly were raising a defense fund for the trial of Roger and three others in the $100,000 William Hamm, jr., kidnaping at St. Paul, Minn.

In one of the telephone conversations, he said, the caller told him: "Something has happened to some of the boys and they need money badly. You'd better hurry and get it together."

All of his emotions and fears, with special emphasis on his love for his wife and two sons, Factor said, were borne down upon as the kidnapers sought to wring from him

U. S. Jury Indicts 2 in Iowa PWA Job

Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 26 (U.P.).—A Federal grand jury indicted Lieut.-Gov. N. G. Kraschel and Carleton D. Beh, a Des Moines bond broker, late today on 19 counts charging conspiracy to defraud the United States Government in connection with Public Works Administration projects.

The two men were indicted jointly on the 19 counts and in a separate indictment Beh was charged with forgery on grounds that he made changes in several pages of an application by the City of Ottumwa, Iowa, for a $140,000 loan and grant to build a bridge under PWA provisions.

U. S. Trade Reprisals In Tax Bill

House Group Approves Retaliatory Levy on Foreign Firms.

Reverses Action Calling for Joint Returns From Couples.

By Robert C. Albright.

After sweeping last-minute alterations, the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday ordered a final draft of its $270,000,000 income tax revision bill, modified all along the line to conform with Treasury recommendations.

Unexpected changes were written into the measure. These struck at foriegn countries discriminating against American branch business offices, imposed a heavy levy on cocoanut and sesame oils and completely reversed earlier action requiring joint income tax returns from married couples.

A reprisal section empowered the Treasury to raise by 50 per cent income taxes levied on foreign business branches in this country where tax discriminations against American firms are practiced in a foreign country.

Aimed at France.

The provision was aimed particularly at France, which recently claimed the right to tax all income of American corporations operating there, regardless of where their income is derived.

The section forcing husbands and wives living together to file one joint return was reconsidered by a 13 to 11 vote. In its place, a plan was adopted requiring joint returns in only eight States having community property laws.

Other last-minute changes would permit a 50 per cent credit for foreign tax payments, against Federal income taxes, and eliminate provisions in the present law permitting corporations to dodge capital gains taxes by reorganization.

An increase of 5 cents per pound in the excise tax on cocoanut and sesame oil was agreed to by a 16-to-5 committee vote. The new levy contrasts with present tariffs of 2 cents a pound on cocoanut oil and 3 cents on sesame oil. The tax strikes a hard blow at Philippine oil imports, which have come into this country duty free.

Still Claim $270,000,000.

A concession to domestic lard, cottonseed, farm and dairy interests, the change was sponsored by Representative Ashton C. Shallenberger (Democrat), Nebraska, who said huge importations of cocoanut and sesame oils, copra and sesame seed have contributed to current domestic surplus of cottonseed oil, lard and butterfat. The tax will raise between $10,000,000 and $60,000,000 annually.

Representative Samuel B. Hill (Democrat), Washington, chairman of a special tax subcommittee, said yesterday's changes practically completed committee action on the bill, although a final vote will be taken Tuesday.

Despite alterations cutting down original revenue estimates, he said, new revenue-producing sections inserted, together with Treasury pledges of tighter enforcement, will produce the $270,000,000 originally claimed for the measure.

"The entire effect of this new bill on the taxpayer is that it cuts the tax for those whose chief

Surgeons described her condition as "not as favorable as hoped." The first transfusion was made yesterday.

First Lady's Protest Improves School Food

Improper Diet Revealed; System Is Given Over to Commissioners.

Following a personal protest by Mrs. Roosevelt, announcement was made yesterday that arrangements for supplying lunches to Washington school children would be changed immediately to insure the children good and adequate food.

Mrs. Roosevelt, accompanied by school and other officials, called upon Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator, and complained that school children were not getting proper food.

Immediately afterward, it was announced that the District, which has been receiving funds from the Relief Administration for school lunches, would take direct charge of providing the lunches. Commissioner Allen is expected to appoint a supervisor and the supplying of food will be taken out of the hands of the present private contractor.

The complaint followed an unexpected visit of Mrs. Roosevelt to some of the schools, where she found no milk, fruit or cereals were being served. The lunches consisted mainly of a form of stew. On a previous visit, she had found milk and fruit were being served.

The Board of Education said special lunches were served that day so Mrs. Roosevelt might "see what was to be a typical day's lunch under the program agreed upon." The board admitted the lunch served on that occasion was not the usual lunch.

Mail Inquiry Wins Support Of President

Black Discusses Survey; Reveals Revocation Authority.

Indorsement of the Senate's ocean and air mail investigation was given yesterday by President Roosevelt.

Senator Black, chairman of the committee, during a prolonged luncheon conference at the White House, pointed out to the President that the Chief Executive is empowered to cancel any mail contracts that might prove inimical to public welfare. The President said he was unaware he had such power until Black told him.

While the President was telling Black that he wished the inquiry pushed to the end, even though it extended beyond the present session of Congress, Karl A. Crowley, solicitor of the Postoffice Department, was studying the record with a view to making a report to the President as to possible cancellations of existing contracts.

Crowley has been in attendance at all the committee hearings, but it is expected he will await the committee's preliminary report, which Black promises within a month, before he makes his report.

Black gave the President a brief summary of the facts revealed so far at the committee hearings, and also an outline of the possible legislative recommendations that the committee might make.

Although there was no discussion of possible criminal prosecutions arising from the Department of Justice investigation, Senator Black said he discussed with the President the "general fraud features" of the revelations made before the committee.

The President said the whole question of subsidies through mail contracts is tied up closely with the broad question of coordination of all transportation, under some directing body, possibly under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Due to the size and complexity of the subject, he said he did not know whether it could be worked out during this session of Congress.

D. C. Liquor Board Named; Sales Feb. 15

Choice of Original 3 Made After White House Conference.

George W. Offutt, Mrs. W. Beverly Mason and Isaac Gans were appointed as the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board by the District Commissioners yesterday.

Appointment of the three original choices was announced by the Commissioners after another White House conference between Commissioner George E. Allen and Marvin H. McIntyre, secretary to President Roosevelt.

Appointment of the beverage board, together with promulgation of the Commissioners' regulations, and the promise of quick appropriation by Congress of requisite funds, made it likely that liquor will be sold legally in the District by February 16 or 17. If there are no hitches anywhere along the line sale could be licensed by February 15.

Applications Delayed.

The regulations do not become effective for five days. Applications for license will not be received before expiration of that limit. Two weeks' public notice must be given on each application and a hearing given protestants.

Opposition to the appointments registered with the White House by Democrats, angered by the continued ignoring of active party workers, was said to have prompted Mr. McIntyre to call Commissioner Allen to the White House, following a previous discussion on the District liquor situation with Postmaster General James A. Farley.

Close on the heels of their appointment of the board the Commissioners announced their regulations supplementing the liquor law, and the Budget Bureau transmitted to the House estimates amounting to $87,793 to finance operations of the beverage board for the remainder of this fiscal year and next year.

Prompt action on estimates was promised by Representative James P. Buchanan (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, who fixed 10 a. m.

U. S. Rushes Food for Cubans As Famine Perils New Regime

Plans were virtually completed yesterday for shipment of $2,000,000 worth of surplus foodstuffs from the United States to Cuba. This is expected to be followed by similar shipments.

Arrangements worked out by Secretary Hull, Secretary Wallace and Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator, provide that the food, mostly pork and lard, be supplied immediately. In exchange the Government will accept notes from the Cuban government.

In some previous instances in which American agricultural products were shipped abroad loans were made through the RFC. In the case of Cuba there will be no money transaction; merely a promise to pay.

Plans to ship food to Cuba, where conditions are said to be serious, particularly in the cities, follows recognition by the United States this week of the new Cuban government. The relief move is looked upon as a part of the program for keeping the present government in power and to diminish unrest.

The surplus food will be purchased from funds obtained by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration from processing taxes on pork products. The Federal Surplus Relief Corporation will act as the agent of the AAA in purchasing the food and shipping it.

Hopkins made it clear that the Federal Emergency Relief Corporation had no power to extend its relief work to Cuba and that "satis-

Los Angeles Gets First Appointment

Hopkins Given Fund for Supplies; D. C. Work Continues.

Army engineers will take over direction of CWA projects in several large cities, Director Harry L. Hopkins announced yesterday.

Appointments were being made last night and announcement of the names of the cities in which the projects will be taken out of the hands of civilian directors and turned over to the Army is expected immediately.

The first appointment was that of Maj. Donald H. Connolly, U. S. Engineers, to have charge in Los Angeles County, Calif. Los Angeles is the scene of a major investigation of alleged CWA irregularities.

The move is designed to eliminate graft and insure efficiency. Graft charges in connection with CWA are being investigated by the Department of Justice in 45 States.

Paid by War Department.

The engineers will be paid by the War Department, but their work will be directed through the Civil Works Administration. Hopkins said the engineers had been "loaned" to him by the War Department.

Some cities, Hopkins said, have requested that Army men be named to take charge. In others there are vacancies in the Civil Works directorships, and in some, it was indicated, directors will be replaced because the Administration is not satisfied with the manner in which the work is being done.

"I don't want it understood that this change is being made only because there have been implications of graft," Hopkins said. He made it clear that appointment of an engineer in a particular city did not necessarily mean that graft had been unearthed there. At the same time, he said, it would be a "fair assumption" that Army men are being appointed in some places "where there is an investigation."

"It seems to us," Hopkins said, "that this plan will give us better administration over tough jobs.

Thousands of Complaints.

The plan of replacing civilian with military administrators follows the statement of Hopkins last Monday that thousands of complaints of political interference and "stealing" in civil works had been pouring into his office. Later, it was stated that

Insull in Air On New Refuge

Hydroplane Reported Set to Carry Magnate to Abyssinia.

Athens, Jan. 26 (AP).—Samuel Insull was rumored today to have ordered a hydroplane held ready for a flight, perhaps to Abyssinia.

At the Aero-Express & Imperial Airways seaplane hangars at Phaleron, however, it was said that no craft was waiting to take the former Chicago utilities operator to a new refuge, but the opinion was expressed that he might hop from emergency fields at Porto Rophiti, 22 miles from here, or Pefko, 20 miles distant.

Meanwhile, Premier Tsaldaris said Insull would be deported February 1 if he does not leave voluntarily by January 31, as ordered by the minister of the interior and the state council, but added:

"If Insull requests a prolongation of his sojourn permit, on the grounds of health, and if the minister of the interior's doctor finds his health dangerous, the Greek government will prolong the permit until his health is satisfactory."

Administration Moves to Repay Hiram Johnson

Farley Suggests Senator Won't Have Trouble in Reelection.

By Raymond Clapper.

The first Administration blessing to be passed out in anticipation of next fall's elections has been laid on the battle-scarred head of Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, a Republican who deserted the Hoover ticket in 1932 to support Franklin D. Roosevelt, and who is up for reelection in November.

This was made known yesterday by the Administration's political spokesman, Postmaster General James A. Farley.

"I am not familiar with the political situation in California in so far as an election of a United States senator is concerned, but personally I know enough about the California people to believe that they will, of course, reelect Senator Hiram Johnson to the Senate," General Farley said.

Colleague Backs Him.

He came forward to champion Senator Johnson after the California Democratic representative, who represents Herbert Hoover's district, John J. McGrath, issued a statement calling upon other California Democrats to offer Senator Johnson the unopposed nomination of the Democratic party for the senatorship.

"This is no time to carp about party labels," Representative McGrath said.

But a jarring note was thrust into this melody of brotherly love. While Mr. Farley's benediction upon California's Republican Senator was echoing up Pennsylvania avenue, a dozen House Democrats marched into President Roosevelt's office to impress upon him the importance of giving more jobs to deserving Democrats.

The President turned his smile full face on the grumbling Representatives and, after letting them talk 50 minutes, told them in substance that it was swell of them to drop in, and wouldn't they get together often and, incidentally, hereafter make their complaints more specific.

They Feel Better.

That didn't exactly satisfy the hungry delegation, but the President had called them by their first names and had treated them so considerately they had to go outside and announce to the press they were satisfied, but that they would hold further conferences.

Postmaster General Farley, who attended, remarked dryly that the meeting was a "social success."

Both of these developments point to the most significant thing that is going on in politics—the fading of old-style political divisions. It may be a passing phase and again it may be the creeping death to the old alignment, which has been predicted for years. Certainly party lines mean even less now than they did during the World War.

Two major causes have brought this about. One is the unparalleled popularity of President Roosevelt, which has been sustained far longer than in any past peace-time Administration. The other is the vast uprooting of old Governmental traditions and the far-reaching realignments under the New Deal recovery policies.

Bay State Feels Lance.

Republicans in Massachusetts are talking about letting Senator David I. Walsh go unopposed for renomination on the Democratic ticket. The most hard-bitten Republican Senators like Hastings, of Delaware; Dickinson, of Iowa, and even Robinson, of Indiana, are shouting about usurpation of powers, about Government by Executive order, about dictatorship by purchase—but they are going easy on President Roosevelt himself.

Until they feel able to come out and fire directly at the head of the Democratic party their attempts to revive partisan divisions will be dulled.

Republican political candidates are also curbed by the fact that PWA, CWA and AAA are pouring millions of dollars into the laps of their constituents. The Administration is building great power projects or other public works on their home grounds.

Even the Senate Republican leader, Charles McNary, of Oregon, is being quiet these days. The Administration has started a large power project in Oregon. Republican voters are getting jobs under CWA. Republican farmers are getting benefit payments from AAA. So long as that goes on, Republican party politics becomes an academic pastime.

So it is in such an atmosphere that at the very moment the Administration starts the 1928 campaign by indorsing a Republican Senator, its own Representatives are complaining of lack of political recognition.

Silent on Two Others.

Postmaster General Farley remained silent, however, concerning two other Republican Senators who, like Johnson, are up for reelection and who bolted the Hoover ticket in 1932. These are Senators Robert M. LaFollette, of Wisconsin, and Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico. Mr. Farley, pressed to say the same thing for them that he did for Senator Johnson, smiled significantly and answered, "Not now."

It may be he is waiting to see if they intend to go along fully on the present legislative program. Or it may be that they are not sure enough of their own State alignments to want the Administration to announce its support of them at this stage.

In general, however, the Administration is sympathetic to Republicans who supported the Administration and is ready to reciprocate, as was reported in The Post January 11.

Senator Johnson is thinking seriously of seeking a new third party nomination under some such designation as the Independent Progressive Republican party. He needs only to circulate petitions and obtain 15,000 signatures, a simple proceeding. Then he would be sure of one nomination. He could also seek the Democratic and Republican nominations. But once on the ballot it would not matter much what party label was at the head of the column.

"No Man Did More."

In urging California Democrats to support Senator Johnson, Representative McGrath, said:

"No man did more than Senator Johnson to insure the election of President Roosevelt. Without thought of his political future, he effectively campaigned the entire country. He was the rallying point for Progressives and Independents everywhere.

"This is no time to carp about party labels. The Democratic party will be honoring itself by offering him the unopposed nomination for reelection. The election will be a mere formality."

Senator William G. McAdoo (Democrat), California, is understood to be agreeable to this program. It is understood to imply, however, that Senator Johnson will take an attitude of at least benevolent neutrality if not a more aggressive one, toward the Democratic candidate for Governor of California. This may be John B. Elliott, an intimate of Senator McAdoo.

Lozier Heads Committee.

The House Patronage Committee which called at the White House was headed by Representative Ralph Lozier, of Missouri. He said:

"While recognizing the tremendous burden the President is carrying and the difficult problems he is trying to solve, and is successfully solving, and while intending in no manner to embarrass the President or divert his energies from his all-important recovery program, the committee, reflecting the views of the House Democrats, are nevertheless convinced that department heads, bureau chiefs, and those in charge of the several Governmental agencies, should give more sympathetic consideration to patronage matters and place more Democrats in positions that are essentially political, or which, under our long-established political system, are recognized as political appointments, or customarily filled by representatives of the party in power, including the personnel of all newly created Governmental agencies except those organized primarily and exclusively for charitable purposes.

Will Continue to Function.

"While the committee is satisfied with the progress that has been made, and with the sympathetic attitude of the President, I think it prudent to withhold further comments for the present, except to say that further conferences will be held and our committee will continue to function."

It may be safely said that President Roosevelt does not intend to turn over the new agencies to patronage distributors without restraint. There is little likelihood the Administration will risk the dangers of settng up purely political organizations in the recovery agencies for three reasons.

One is that it would tend to lessen efficiency by making appointees more responsible to political sponsors than to their actual superiors in the Government offices. A second is that Administration officials, like Secretary Ickes, Secretary Wallace, Harry Hopkins, and the Morgans of TVA, will not tolerate wholesale unloading of political heelers into their organizations.

A third reason is that the Democratic party has always been a minority party nationally, and that if it is to establish a real domination of the country which will be needed after it no longer has the Roosevelt popularity to support it, then it must draw in large numbers of Republicans and annex them. That is really what is going on.

Lozier, Missouri; Oliver, Alabama; O'Connor, New York; Adams, Delaware; Mrs. Norton, New Jersey; Musselwhite, Michigan; White, Idaho; McClintic, Oklahoma; Fiesinger, Ohio; Browning, Tennessee; Carpenter, Nebraska; Cox, Georgia.

As a footnote, Representative Carpenter led the recent House patronage revolt. Later it was disclosed he had recommended at least three Republicans for postmasterships in his district. The reason is that his district is normally overwhelmingly Republican, and he needs Republican votes.

Army Officers Will Take Over CWA to Stamp Out Graft

200 to 300 complaints were being received at the White House every day.

The Department of Justice was asked by Hopkins to investigate graft reports. Hopkins, in his original statement, said that tens of thousands of dollars were being spent to investigate these reports. Later, he said stories of graft in CWA projects were being considerably exaggerated.

The request of Hopkins that the Department of Justice investigate his own department was an unprecedented move. So is his announcement that Army engineers will take over civil works administration.

The CWA is the second relief project in which the Army has been "drafted" to serve. Army officers are in charge of training men working in the Civilian Conservation Corps, but there they are engaged in training and discipline. In connection with the CWA, they will have charge of purely executive and administrative work.

The engineers are not being employed in the capacity of technical inspectors. They will have full charge of employment and purchasing of equipment and supplies.

Able to Halt "Chiseling."

It was pointed out that they will go into each community "cold," with no political or other ties, and that they will be in a position to stop "chiseling" and political favoritism.

Hopkins, at the same time, announced that the CWA had released $13,000,000 for the purchase of materials, a portion of the money being allotted to each of the States. He said he expected these materials to last for a week or ten days.

In the allotment the District of Columbia receives $100,000; Maryland, $200,000; Virginia, $325,000, and West Virginia, $180,000.

Meanwhile there was a delay in introducing bills calling for additional Civil Works and relief funds. At the White House it was said all that was holding up legislation for the $1,166,000,000 relief fund, $850,000,000 of which is to go for civil works and relief administration, is the question whether to divide up the figure into two or more bills, or cover all in one.

Director of the Budget Lewis W. Douglas has been trying to find out which course of procedure would be preferable to leaders in Congress, in an effort to obtain early action. The question was whether quicker action could be obtained by splitting up the bill, since then the whole bill would not have to go to as many committees.

White House Demands Probe.

It was indicated the bill would be ready for transmission to committees early next week.

It was also indicated at the White House that the Administration is insisting that all CWA graft reports be investigated.

The President had before him a request of Gov. Floyd B. Olson of Minnesota, that the Civil Works program be continued beyond May 1. Olson reported to the President on progress of civil and public works projects in his State.

"I talked over the CWA with the President," Olson said, "and the fact that some guys stole a few bucks should not matter in deciding whether it should be continued. What difference does a few bucks make when there are $400,000,000 involved?

"The CWA is the greatest project the Government has and it should go on."

Ride to Work in Autos.

Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican) New York, yesterday demanded that Hopkins eliminate politicians in the dispensation of jobs. He said something should be done immediately to keep those persons not in need off the CWA pay rolls. He said hundreds of CWA workers in New York were riding to work in automobiles, while starving persons could not obtain employment.

Hopkins announced at a morning press conference that any office holders or candidates for office found in the ranks of CWA would be dropped immediately.

"I feel that such persons have no place in the organization," he said. "A man might be doing the best kind of work, but if he is a candidate for office, he should not be allowed to continue."

Difficulties continued to be reported from West Virginia, although CWA work was resumed in the face of a threatened strike called by the Unemployed League.

Jobs Sold, Is Charge.

Beehler replied that his "only crime was a flat refusal to turn the Civil Works program over to Senator Neely and some other politicians.

Representatives of the Federal Reemployment Service in 18 southern West Virginia counties and northern and eastern district managers were called to Charleston, for a conference on reputed CWA "racketeering." It was reported that some jobs were being "sold."

Wild Life Plan Wins Roosevelt

Approves National Program to Aid Migratory Game Birds.

A National plan for conservation of wild life, drafted by the President's Committee on Wild iLfe and indorsed by spokesmen for hunters and fishermen, yesterday received the enthusiastic approval of President Roosevelt.

As a large delegation of conservatives left the White House, Senator Frederic C. Walcott (Republican), Connecticut, said the President was particularly pleased with the unanimity of the program.

The plan calls for Government pu-chase of breeding areas for migratory waterfowl, a Nation-wide wild life restoration program on publiclands, the duck stamp bill, and coordination of all Federal conservation work.

Mrs. Roosevelt Forces Better School Food

not so hot," Hopkins said after the interview. "So we decided to make them good."

Accompanying Mrs. Roosevelt were Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, of the Children's Bureau; Dr. Louis Stanley, of the Department of Agriculture; Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, Mrs. Mercedes Boyle, Commissioner Allen, George Wilson, of the Public Works Administration; Dr. Frank Ballou, superintendent of schools, and Leroy Halbert, in charge of emergency relief.

In one of the schools visited, Mrs. Roosevelt reported she found lunch consisted of stew and a roll spread with peanut butter. At another, the lunch consisted of macaroni and a roll with peanut butter.

"School officers and emergency relief authorities have run into many unexpected and embarrassing difficulties in their efforts to increase the menu for the emergency lunches," the Board of Education statement said. "During the Christmas holidays daily conferences were held at which there was present a representative of the District of Columbia Relief Administration.

This representative stated that menus could be prepared with the understanding surplus milk, fruit and other surplus foods would soon be available."

Milk Starts Monday.

The statement said that when the lunches began to be served, on January 2, it was expected there would be little delay in receiving Government surplus foods. Bids for supplying milk, to be paid for from relief funds, it was explained, have been opened and school authorities are definitely assured of a supply of milk Monday. It was said schools have been told that carloads of fruit will soon arrive.

Explaining the difference in conditions found by Mrs. Roosevelt when she made an unannounced visit to schools and when she made an unexpected visit, the Board of Education said:

"When Mrs. Roosevelt visited the Morgan School and the Thomson School, soon after the program had been launched, the relief authorities agreed that day to serve milk and fruit in order that Mrs. Roosevelt and representatives of the Board of Education might see what was to be a typical day's lunch under the program agreed upon. There was no attempt to set up a staged or false impression."

Additions Agreed On.

"At a meeting of the Central Advisory Committee last Monday in Commissioner Allen's office," the statement continued, "it was the consensus that there should be additions to the menu in order to provide a more adequate lunch. Mrs. John Boyle, jr., was appointed by the chairman of the committee to cooperate with school officers with a view to adjusting the menus."

It was stated that Mrs. Boyle and the school authorities consulted Dr. Stanley, in charge of the home economics section of the Department of Agriculture. Dr. Stanley, it was said, is making suggestions regarding the menus.

"The cafeteria manager was asked by school officers for a statement in regard to the dish served at the Cranch school at the time of Mrs. Roosevelt's visit," the statement continued. "He described the dish as a vegetable chowder with diced beef. The ingredients used in the preparation of this food were as follows: 600 pounds of beef, 40 pounds of onions, 300 pounds of potatoes, 80 pounds of carrots, and 15 pounds of cooking butter. The stock used was obtained by boiling for 10 hours 200 pounds of freshly cut-out marrow bones.

Same as Last Year.

"The cafeteria manager states that this chowder was approximately the same as one of the most popular dishes prepared last year when free lunches were served in the schools by this manager."

The statement added that the food was sent out on the basis of 1 gallon for each 15 pupils.

The statement concludes:

"The school officials desire to state for the benefit of the public: First, that they are using and intend to use every effort to serve to every child menus supplied by experienced dietitians; second, that it is and always has been the expectation that the lunch would include a serving of milk and as often as possible some fruit. Preparations for serving milk have been completed, and it is hoped the supply of fruit will be available at an early date."

Yellow Fever Victory Hailed In Vaccine's 100 Pct. Success

New York, Jan. 26 (AP).—One hundred and fifty persons in New York London and Paris have been immunized against yellow fever with a new Rockefeller Foundation vaccine. To date, this artificial protection has been 100 per cent successful.

The vaccine promises victory for medicine in one of its longest and most tragic battles with a disease that has taken the lives of a long list of scientists.

The present immunizing substance is so difficult and expensive that it can not be supplied in sufficient quantity to immunize a threatened population. Only enough can be made to protect persons taking special risks.

These include the laboratory workers who are still handling the deadly tubes in search for methods of quantity production.

Human beings have been taking the immunity treatment for two years. Fifty or more have been vaccinated here. Not one of those vaccinated two years ago has lost his immunity.

Medical men point out that this vaccine appears to be remarkably like that for smallpox in duration of protection.

Shot in Side, Youth Walks Half a Mile

Winchester, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—Charles L. Preffit, 19, of Fawcett Gap, was in Memorial Hospital today after his shotgun fired while he climbed a fence. He was wounded in the side, but walked a half mile for aid.

Newton Long and Harry Clagett brought the youth to the hospital. Physicians give him a fair chance to recover.

Preffit's accident was the first of the hunting and trapping season in Frederick County.

Senate Democrats to Force Money Bill Passage Today

beginning today. Republican Leader Charles L. McNary, however, refused on the ground that such an arrangement might oppress several Republicans, who wished to discuss the bill.

Whereupon Senator Robinson announced he would insist on a night session unless an agreement was reached. Senator Wheeler made a preliminary statement describing his bill and its purposes. But by 5.45 p. m. the Republicans withdrew their objection to the time limitation, on condition that the night session be abandoned.

Final Vote Near.

It was agreed the Senate would convene at 11 a. m. today, that the Wheeler amendment would be voted on not later than 2 p. m. and that beginning at 4 p. m. no Senator would be permitted to speak more than 10 minutes on the bill nor more than once for 10 minutes on each amendment. This arrangement should bring a final vote by 6 o'clock or before.

Earlier in the day—a sharp debate raged over the bill between Senator Robinson and Senator David A. Reed (Republican), Pennsylvania. Reed contended the measure "repudiated" a part of the Government's debt to its citizens, that it injured the Nation's credit, that the country's credit system was being taken from nonpolitical control and thrown into "the maelstrom of partisan politics."

Defending the bill against the attacks of Senator Reed and the other Republicans who have assailed it, Senator Robinson taunted them as apostles of a policy of "laissez-faire, sit-still-and-do nothing." Contending the bill represented the "best thought that has been put forth on the subject of our monetary system considered in connection with foreign exchange," he challenged its opponents to offer a more constructive program.

Other Defenders.

"It is better, far better," shouted Senator Robinson, "that the readjustments contemplated by this bill should come now and as speedily as possible rather than the doctrine of my friend from Pennsylvania should prevail and that we should go on doing nothing into a black chasm of despair."

The bill also was defended at great length by Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), North Carolina, who contended that the attacks of foreign nations on our dollar position and the huge $220,000,000,000 debt burden of this country made it necessary.

Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, also applauded the measure, but devoted most of his speech to the contention that there could be no price rises, unless the circulating medium is increased. Previously, he announced abandonment of his plan to offer an amendment making currency inflation mandatory under the bill because of his inability to get support for the proposal.

Amendment Roll Call.

Only seven Democrats voted to amend the bill to place the stabilization fund under a five-man board. They were joined by 29 Republicans. On the other hand, 50 Democrats and only three Republicans voted against the amendment. So did Senator Shipstead, the lone Farmer-Labor member.

The roll call on this amendment was as follows:

For the amendment, 36.

Democrats—Byrd, Glass, Lonergran, McGill, Tydings.

Democrats — Ashurst, Bachman, Bailey, Bankhead, Barkley, Black, Bone, Brown, Bulkley, Bulow, Byrnes, Caraway, Clark, Connally, Coolidge, Copeland, Costigan, Dieterich, Dill, Duffy, Erickson, Fletcher, George, Harrison, Hatch, Hayden, King, Lewis, Logan, McCarran, McKellar, Murphy, Neely, O'Mahoney, Overton, Pittman, Pope, Reynolds, Robinson (Arkansas), Russell, Sheppard, Smith, Stephens, Thomas (Utah), Thompson, Trammell, Van Nuys, Wagner, Walsh, Wheeler.

Republicans — Borah, Johnson, Norris.

Farmer-Labor—Shipstead.

The pairs were: For the amendment, Gore (Democrat), and Metcalf (Republican). Against the amendment, Norbeck (Republican) and Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma. It was announced that Senator Couzens (Republican) would have voted for the amendment had be been present.

Roll Call Is Test.

This roll call was a test on the bill. The opposition to the measure as a whole will not be as large as the vote in favor of this amendment, since a number of those supporting the bill believed it was unwise to place so much power in the hands of one man.

When the Senate reached the committee amendment, designed to restrict the Treasury Secretary's powers to dealing in foreign exchange, Senator Fletcher (Democrat), Florida, in charge of the measure, said the Administration did not wish to prevent stobilization of the dollar at home.

Senator Reed pointed out that lack of the restriction would mean the Secretary could deal in commodities and that it meant an approach to the "commodity dollar" which President Roosevelt had referred to some months ago in a speech. Senator Shipstead asserted that if management of the domestic currency were desired the restrictive amendment should not be adopted.

The roll call on this amendment was in general similiar to that on the 5-man board proposal. Absence of several Senators as well as pairs accounted chiefly for the difference in the vote. Senators Bulkley and Van Nuys, who opposed the first amendment, supported this one. Senators LaFollette and McGill, who supported the first amendment, opposed this, the second.

3-Year Period Approved.

By a viva voce vote the Senate adopted the Glass and Bulkley amendments restricting to three years the life of the stabilization fund and the period in which the President may exercise the revaluation power. It also adopted several amendments offered by Senator Arthur H. Vandenburg (Republican), Michigan, requiring the President's approval for stabilization fund operations.

It was then that the Wheeler amendment came up, but before the Montanan made much progress in explaining his proposal the recess was taken.

Senator Reed in beginning his address said he would not discuss the Constitutional aspects of the bill except to say that after reading the recent Minnesota mortgage decision the only lesson he could draw was that "the Supreme Court has held that the safeguards of the Constitution are to be effective only when we do not need them."

Opposes 1926 Tax Level.

Conceding the restoration of a "fair price level" was a "praiseworthy" objective, he paused to voice doubt whether the high 1926 level was a fair one toward which to strive. As the first method of achieving this end, he continued, the bill provided a stabilization fund to be used not only to buy foreign exchange but also "to peg the price of Government bonds so it will be easier for us to sell additional billions of Government bonds to our own people, who will be misled by that pegged price."

He said it was therein proposed to do with Government bonds "that dishonest thing that we have been damning the bankers for doing with other types of securities. When the bankers did it we cried 'jail them' but when the Government does it, it is considered to be praiseworthy," he added.

But he would not complain of that, he said. A similar device was used to peg bond prices after the armistice. He recalled that Eugene Meyer, then director of the War Finance Corporation, "carried on with honesty and ability a system of price-fixing in the Government bond market."

"He was not able to keep the prices up," Senator Reed said, recalling that he remembered Fourth Libertys selling at 84. He added that "had it not been for Mr. Meyer's operations they undoubtedly would be quoted much lower."

Job Fund Cut Causes Protest

Secretary Perkins Asks House Group Not to Impair Service.

(Associated Press.)

Aroused because the House Appropriations Committee proposed to cut in half the allotment for her new Federal employment service, Secretary Perkins yesterday went before the committee to protest.

Advised that the committee intended to reduce from $4,000,000 to $2,000,000 the amount allowed for the employment service established under last session's Wagner-Peyser bill, she told the committee she could "not understand" the reasoning behind the proposed action.

Afterward, she said to newspapermen:

"I felt very badly. I came to plead. I can't understand why they cut it. The original intention was to appropriate $1,500,000 for the employment service this year and $4,000,000 for it next year.

"It was understood that we would have two years to see its effect. We have had only six or eight months."

She explained that the President and the Budget Bureau had approved the $4,000,000.

Japan Bans Story Of Imaginary War

Author, Naval Officer Cancels Story.

Tokio, Jan. 26 (U.P.).—Publication of a fanciful fiction story describing an imaginary war between Japan and a foreign power, was suppressed today after conferences among government leaders, the United Press learned.

The story was said to have been written by the author of similar fiction seized by United States customs authorities at Honolulu. In the confiscated pamphlets, issued as a supplment to a popular Japanese magazine, a war between the United States and Japan for possession of Hawaii was described, with the Japanese victorious.

The writer, a retired Japanese naval officer, consented to cancel the second story, it was said.

Transient Boy Dies Calling for 'Mama'

Telegrams Fail to Bring Answer From Family.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 26 (AP).—Calling for his "mama," Wallace Isbell, 17, died today.

He was admitted to the hospital Tuesday from a transient bureau, suffering from pneumonia. He asked continuously for "Mama" and spoke of four brothres and sisters at Downers Grove, Ill. Occasionally he asked for "Nancy."

Telegrams to Downers Grove brought no reply.

Gasoline Tax Raise Opposed By Mrs. Norton

House District Group's Chairman to Fight Smith Bill.

There will be no increase in the District's gasoline tax if Chairman Norton of the House District Committee has anything to do with it.

Commenting yesterday on the bill introduced by Representative Smith (Democrat), Alexandria, she said that she is stanchly opposed to any measure designed to increase taxes in the District.

"Why should the District pay a higher gasoline tax just because Virginia does?" she asked. "Judging by the surplus which the Budget Bureau provided for in District revenues in 1935, the District doesn't need any additional taxes."

Smith's bill, which has been referred to the House District Committee, proposed an increase in the local gasoline tax from 2 to 4 cents.

The measure also proposed that the gasoline tax fund be abolished, making gas tax revenue available for all public improvements and that special assessments on realty property holders for street improvements be discontinued after his bill is enacted.

A similar bill introduced two years ago by Representative Mapes (Republican), Michigan, never was reported to the House.

Virginia Frosh Score Over Petersburg, 64-34

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.). Virginia's freshmen quintet registered its third successful victory here this afternoon, defeating Petersburg High, 64 to 34. The visitors came here with a record of six straight wins over John Marshall, McGuire's and Thomas Jefferson, of Richmond, Hopewell and Dandron.

The Cockade City equad enjoyed a 2-point margin at the end of the first quarter, but thereafter was outdistanced.

factory" credit must be arranged. This credit is expected to involve simply a note from the Cuban government.

The $2,000,000 shipment is expected to be only a beginning. Eventually, if arrangements are satisfactory, the shipments are expected to reach $10,000,000. The food is expected to go forward at the rate of $2,000,000 every week or two.

Reports from Cuba indicate that a condition of actual starvation among the poorer classes is rapidly approaching, and that the government fears this condition may lead to further trouble unless it is remedied immediately. Just before formation of the Mendieta government it was estimated that conditions of actual starvation would be reached by February 15. It is expected that food shipments from the United States will reach the island before that time.

Previous to recognition of the present Cuban government there existed no official channel through which the United States could extend relief to the Cuban people.

Proof of the New Deal Pudding.

America is not a country of States, but of empires—of regions reducible to one chief concern and hope. The cotton South is an empire. So are the tobacco South, the Tennessee Valley, the oil lands, the corn belt and New England. Only the empire of California observes State boundaries.

To find, by taking a myriad small pulses, the pulse of each of our empires, James Remington McCarthy recently made a 12,000-mile swing around the country. It was an informal and almost casual trip. He wanted only to learn "how things were going." Being a newspaperman, he knew pretty well beforehand what the officials, the chambers of commerce secretaries and the experts would reply to his questions. So he did not talk very long with them. But with farmers, miners, clerks, cowboys, factory workers and hoboes, with "the debtor class" and "the forgotten man," he opened innumerable conversations and listened attentively.

• • • •

"The New Pioneers" (Bobbs-Merrill, $2.50) is the record of what he found in this country under the New Deal. McCarthy writes it as an easy narrative, allowing you to form your own judgments as you go along. Yet, because he met so many varieties of experience, because his reporting is both faithful and impartial, the book is imperative reading for any one who wants to see what the people of this country are doing and thinking in these crucial times. An evening with "The New Pioneers" is somewhat simpler than repeating his trip, but you can trust the one as you would the other.

Everywhere people were government conscious. Everyone—tenant farmers in the South, Navajos in Arizona—knew what the New Deal meant, at least as a phrase. Only an old fellow in the Ozarks had to scratch his head and rely on the terms "good times, bad times." And to almost every one it meant a kind of hope, a freshening of chances. The Southern tenant farmer did not think this, nor the Hollywood "extra," nor the Colorado beet farmer, who had to let his children work in the fields. The New Deal had done nothing for them. But coal miners and steel workers thanked it, and textile hands, CCC boys and the whole valley of the Tennessee as well. Side by side with an Iowa farmer insisting that he would fight the Government was another who would have nothing to do with strikes. It was all very mixed, as one might expect.

But McCarthy's broad view led him, at the end of the volume, to draw a few conclusions. The South, by and large, "is enjoying its first real prosperity since before the Civil War." The Tennessee Valley is "a place of hope." In the oil region of the South Central States conditions have not been good, but will improve. Conditions in the Southwest are bad, and in California and the Northwest and the Inland Empire, very good. The next region, centering around Utah and Wyoming, is badly off. The great central farm region he finds no worse off than any other section of the country, adding that "the farmer simply can shout louder than the white-collar worker in the city." In the Eastern industrial region conditions are very good, he finds, and New England is the most prosperous.

He puts no faith in talk of a "revolution." He sees that the two-party system is disappearing. As a whole, he reports throughout the country "a spirit that is inspiring." "Many things," he writes, "help you to see that we are again in a pioneering age." That spirit and that endeavor are worth discovering in action from McCarthy's honest pages.

PAY restoration on a retroactive basis is provided for in a bill being prepared for early introduction in the Senate. The plan calls for 5 per cent restoration as of January 1 and the remainder July 1. Action on the bill is expected Tuesday or Wednesday, after the Appropriations Committee gets the Independent Offices measure out of the way.

Sentiment in favor of repealing the pay cut continues to grow in both branches of Congress. Employe leaders seem more optimistic now than during any period since the present session began. Each predicts that the House will agree with the Senate on a more liberal pay restoration plan.

"Jake" Factor Names Touhy As Kidnaper

every possible dollar before his release.

Factor began his story with the kidnaping as he and a party of friends were starting home at 1 a. m. the morning of July 1 from The Dells, a suburban roadhouse. Men with machine guns, rifles and pistols dragged him from his automobile in view of his wife, Rella, and his oldest son, Jerome, 20, a previous victim of kidnapers.

They loaded him into an automobile, took him miles away into a dingy basement, where a man identified by Factor as Touhy cuffed him and said:

"Well, you dirty ——, we've got you and we'll kill you if anything less than $500,000 is paid."

Then began a night of abuse which he said was made bearable only by reassurances of a man he called "the kind kidnaper" that he would not be slain. The abductors snipped a scissors and threatened to "cut off an ear and send it to your wife as a souvenir." All night they cursed him, Factor said, clicking pistols suggestively and threatening to "spatter your brains all over the place."

"The Coffee Man."

When morning came, the "kind kidnaper" brought Factor coffee and toast. From that time, Factor said, he always called that man "the coffee man."

"I told the coffee man that I'd pay anything asked," he said, "but that I had to be released that day. I told them it might get in the papers and hurt my extradition case to England." He promised to see what he could do, and went upstairs, returning almost immediately, and saying:

"The board of directors isn't out of bed yet."

His release was not forthcoming, and that night he said Touhy and the others returned with profane threats to "take you for a ride because your friends have called the police in."

Factor said he replied to Touhy: "My God! Is this the end? Haven't you any mercy or regard for human life?" Touhy laughed, he said, but "The Coffee Man" whispered: "Don't be afraid."

They took him in an automobile with many threats and drove to another farmhouse, where he was installed on the second floor. Living conditions were better there, he said, and there was a bed cleaner than the vermin-invested one in the basement. "The Coffee Man" continued bringing him meals.

Threatened to Burn Feet.

Often, Factor testified, the other kidnapers returned to harass him. Once, he said, they brought a blowtorch and threatened to "burn your feet off up to the ankles."

In complaining of police activity, Factor said one of the kidnapers once told him he probably would be killed, even if the huge ransom was paid, adding that he might be killed in a few minutes.

"I was terrified and began to pray," Factor said, his voice breaking. "The kidnaper said: 'Why are you praying to God? Your life belongs to me. What do I care for your life, anyway? I want the money.'"

Forced Cotton Cut Is Favored By Roosevelt

Voluntary Plan Collapse Leads to Bankhead Measure.

President Roosevelt is understood to feel that it probably will be necessary to come to compulsory restriction of cotton production, as proposed in the Bankhead bill, it was made known at the White House yesterday.

However, it was explained that it was desired to take such a step only with the approval of the cotton growers. The White House indicated that it expected this approval to be forthcoming. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace announced he was sending $50,000 questionnaires into the cotton belt to ascertain sentiment.

These developments, as exclusively reported in The Post yesterday, grew out of the threatened collapse of the cotton restriction program, which up to now has been conducted on a voluntary basis. Farmers were solicited to voluntarily agree to plant less acreage in return for receiving benefit payments from the Government. But with acreage restricted they began to put on more fertilizer to increase the yield.

Then, due to political pressure, cotton loans were made by the Government at 10 cents a pound virtually pegging the price. This has made cotton growing so attractive that hundreds of farmers are going back to cotton, but staying out of the voluntary restriction plan.

The plan now proposed is to place a confiscatory tax on all cotton sold in excess of allotted amounts. There is already agitation for applying similar compulsory restriction to wheat and corn, but the Administration feels the time is not here to consider such proposals. They recognize, however, the possibility that the same conditions which are forcing a resort to compulsion may soon develop in other crops.

Naval Program Menace, Villard Tells Roosevelt

U. S. "Courting Disaster," Offsetting Good Will, Editor Asserts.

The United States is "courting disaster" by embarking on a naval race with Great Britain and Japan, said Oswald Garrison Villard, long-time editor of The Nation, following a conference with President Roosevelt yesterday.

Applauding the Administration's "good neighbor" policy toward Latin-America, Mr. Villard said he protested to the President the warship program provided by the pending Vinson bill as likely to offset recent improvements in foreign relations. He added:

"I talked to the President about exploitation of labor under the NRA and the need of stiffening enforcement."

"I also came to protest against the naval armament race that we have gotten into with Japan and Great Britain," the liberal editor said, "particularly in view of the action of the Vinson committee in rushing through in three hours its huge proposal for naval building without allowing opposition to be expressed.

"We are doing wonderful work in improving our Latin-American relations; we have made more progress in the nine months of this Administration than in years before. But it seems to me, on the other side, we are courting disaster in getting into a naval race."

The navy bill prepared by Representative Carl Vinson (Democrat), Georgia, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, would enable the President to authorize 101 ships, largely for replacements. It has received Administration approval, provided there is no time commitment.

A corresponding bill was introduced in the Senate yesterday by Senator Park Trammell (Democrat), of Florida, chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee. It permits the President to build the fleet up to the London naval agreement.

Jameson Beaten By Bean at Miami

Victor Continues March by Trimming New Yorkers.

Miami, Fla., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—E. H. Bean, of Washington, D. C., was a double-winner in the annual Miami-Biltmore Invitation Golf Tournament here today. In the third round this morning he eliminated a fellow-townsman, E. C. Jameson, a left-hander, 3 and 1, and then continued his victorious march in the second division by winning a 19-hole match from M. Rosenthal, of Hempstead, N. Y.

The comedalists, Curtis Bryan, of Jacksonville, Fla., and Bill Wilkenson, of Indianapolis, will meet in the 36-hole final for the title tomorrow. Bryan won his semifinal round match from H. F. Bowbeer, of Chicago, on the nineteenth hole. Wilkenson disposed of S. C. Anderson, of Chicago, 3 up and 1 to play.

Wilkenson registered a surprise victory in the morning when he put out Celeste Durand, 20-year-old Monroe, N. Y., star, 3 and 2. Bryan's victim was T. E. Price, of Miami, whom he defeated by a similar score.

If Thermometer Says "Fever!" It's Probably Absolutely Right

U. S. Bureau Checks Them by Thousand, Insures Accuracy.

If you have occasion to take your temperature—although we hope you never have a fever—you can trust your clinical thermometer.

Clinical thermometers are accurate, because of nine women workers in the Thermometry Division of the Bureau of Standards they test one of the most important diagnostic instruments of medicine.

Presided over by Miss Johanna Busse, only woman division chief at the bureau, they test and calibrate clinical thermometers from all manufacturers of the country.

Not every instrument sold is tested at the bureau, but samples are sent, so it is reasonably certain that all instruments are sufficiently correct.

The testing includes checking of the temperature at three points with readings of a thermometer of known accuracy. The thermometers are also checked to determine whether they will hold their readings.

This work is not done free of charge. Sometimes as many as 100,000 thermometers a year are checked, at 10 cents each.

In fact, all kinds of thermometers, recording temperatures from 100 degrees below zero to 600 degrees Centigrade, are tested. Several other types, some used in control of vital industrial processes, are calibrated by this bureau.

The experts test platinum resistance thermometers—the most accurate instrument. Thermocouples—instruments which record degrees of heat by the amount of electricity generated in two joined wires of different substances—are also tested by them.

All Disputes Involved.

An official communique said:

"Foreign Minister von Neurath and Minister Lipski of Poland signed at the Berlin foreign office today a declaration concluding a ten-year nonaggressive pact between Germany and Poland with a view to consolidating peace in Europe and on the principles of the Kellogg pact.

"Both states undertake to settle all disputes of whatever nature arising between them by direct agreement."

Peace Only Aim of Pact, Polish Officials State

Warsaw, Poland, Jan. 26 (AP).—A friendship and nonaggression agreement signed by Poland and Germany in Berlin today was described in official circles here tonight as "the most important step in the European political situation."

It was pointed out that the pact is a practical political move and the logical issue of a Polish foreign policy which aims to smooth out international relations without a recourse to arms. Peace is its only aim, officials said, adding that the treaty is independent of the "changing fortunes of other international institutions."

Recovery Progress Now Rapid, Says Professor.

Danville, Ill., Jan. 26 (AP).—Dr. Frank A. Pearson, of Cornell University, supporting the Administration's monetary policy, assured Illinois Agricultural Association members here today that rapid progress is being made toward a stable purchasing power.

"We should not be to disturbed because so little progress has been made," he said. "Inertia is such a dominant force in our thoughts and actions that great changes rarely occur until an unusual event forces them upon us.

"The unparalleled peace-time rise in the value of gold forced the issue and very rapid progress is now being made."

Salem College Boxers Face Richmond Tonight

Salem, Va., Jan. 26 (AP).—Lack of a fighter in the 135-pound class is the chief worry of Coach Claude Moorman as he grooms his Salem College mittmen for their meet with the Spiders of Richmond University at the State Capital tomorrow night.

Roy Lee "Ringie" Ringstaff, flashy gridman of the Maroons, was scheduled for the match, but seems unable to make the weight. The Roanokers forfeited to Washington and Lee last week in that division, when Ringstaff appeared 4 pounds over the weight limit.

Coach Moorman was afraid he would be forced to forfeit again if an eligible fighter failed to show up for the encounter. Gott and Brakely, finalists in the intramural bouts in the 135-pound weight division, are freshmen.

The word "licensee" shall mean the holder of a license issued under said act.

Words defined in Section 3 of said act shall have the same meaning in these regulations.

Among outstanding entrants in the event will be Larry Christoff and R. R. Phillips. Christoff is the self-proclaimed champion of this district at all distances from one-half to 10 miles. Phillips has been a consistent winner in recent races at the armory.

A score of entrants are expected to line up for the start of the race. The first two to finish will be awarded prizes. The finals in a series being held to select the most graceful skating couple in Washington are scheduled for tomorrow night.

10 of 11 Giants' Pitchers Signed to '34 Contracts

New York, an. 26 (AP).—Ten of the 11 pitchers on the roster of the New York Giants were under contract today with the receipt of the signed documents from Bill Shores, of Lawn, Texas, and John Salveson, of Long Beach, Calif. Both are right-handers.

Shores was recalled from Kansas City last season, after being purchased the previous winter from Portland of the Pacific Coast League. Salveson finished the 1933 campaign with the Giants after being on option in the spring with Dallas of the Texas League.

Choice of Original 3 Made After White House Conference.

Monday for hearings. With the beverage board waiting to function until Congress has appropriated funds for its work, speedy passage of the appropriation has been promised by House and Senate leaders.

Outstanding in the regulations was one forbidding sale of liquor in packages after 8 p. m. through the wek and 9 p. m. on Saturday. The law forbids sale by dring or package on Sunday except by licensed drug stores on physician's prescription.

Sales Limited to 2 a. m.

Sale by drink in licensed hotels, restaurants and clubs were permitted until 2 a. m. week nights, other outstanding provisions of which are set forth elsewhere in The Post.

Appointment of the beverage board was regarded as the most important since the new Commissioners took office and was interpreted as intentionally widening the breach between the regular Democratic organization in the District, which was one of the first to back the candidacy of President Roosevelt, and those in control of jobs.

Commissioner Allen denied the White House conferences had to do with appointment of board members. The President, he said, wanted to make certain the regulations of the Commissioners would forbid bars.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, however, admitted complaints had been made against selection of Mr. Gans because he was a Republican.

Nonpartisanship Claimed.

Mr. Gans admitted he had contributed to Republican campaign funds but deprecated importance of his political affiliations, describing himself as a voteless resident of the District. His friends pointed out that he receives no salary as a member of the board of education nor as a member of the board of indeterminate sentence and parole, to which he was appointed under preceding Republican administrations.

He resigned from the parole board yesterday and also tendered his resignation to the District Supreme Court as a jury commissioner. A salary of $400 a year is paid jury commissioners.

The new board will take office as soon as Congress appropriates necessary funds. Commissioner Allen said Mr. Offut will be chairman. He was appointed for a four-year term; Mrs. Mason was named for three years, and Mr. Gans for two years. Successors will be appointed for regular four-year terms except to fill unexpired term.

Notice Required.

Liquor will not flow legally in Washington until at least two weeks after the board takes office. The law requires two weeks public notice be given of applications for licenses. If there is a protest against granting of any license, a hearing must be had. Owners of 51 per cent of real estate within a radius of 600 feet of the place for which a license is sought may forbid issuance of a license by registering their opposition.

Commissioner Allen indicated his determination to keep a close hand on the beverage board. He believes the board should require licenses to be mailed.

No applications will be received until five days have elapsed. The law requires that much public notice be given of the Commissioners' regulations.

Enforcement Pledged.

All liquor board members pledged strict enforcement of the law. Mr. Offutt, chairman of the board, said: "It is a liberal law and I am going to make sure that it is enforced to the letter." The board will not meet until it is sworn in, he said.

The deficiencies subcommittee, of which Representative Buchanan is chairman, will have charge of the beverage board estimates.

Cut about $12,000 under figures submitted by the District Commissioners, the estimates were forwarded to Capitol Hill yesterday by the President. The Budget Bureau had eliminated 2 of the 10 inspectors proposed and had cut their salaries from $2,600 to $2,300.

The estimate provides $75,000 for the board and its operations and $12,793 to employ three additional assistant corporation counsel to aid in enforcement of the District liquor law.

Later Hours Sought.

Chairman Norton of the House District Committee yesterday received an appeal from the Hotel and Restaurant Employes Local, No. 781, to attach another amendment to those asked by the President so liquor may be sold in the District after 2 p. m. Sunday.

Under signature of Charles E. Sands, secretary, the telegram to Mrs. Norton stated:

"As long as the District liquor bill is to be amended, wouldn't it be possible also to amend it providing for Sunday sales after 2 p. m.? The Sunday clause now in the bill is unjust to hotels and restaurants in the District. Many conventions and visitors will pass up the District for cities where more liberal regulations prevail."

Chairman Norton fought for Sunday opening, but was overruled by Senate conferees when the measure went into conference.

Amendments Up Wednesday.

She said yesterday the amendments to the District bill proposed by the President probably will be considered Wednesday at an executive session of the District Committee.

Texas Turkeys Starving.

Kerrville, Tex. (U.P.).—Thousands of wild turkeys are starving to death in this area. Long drought has so reduced the food supply that sheep and goats have eaten most of the grass and other feed that would have helped the turkeys. Many turkeys are in such starved condition that hunters will not kill them.

*Earned income means wages, salaries, professional fees or other amounts received for personal services actually rendered.

U. S. Trade Reprisals Added To Tax Bill by House Group

income is their salary and similar types of earnings, while increasing the tax on those who derive their money from dividends and interest," Chairman Hill said.

He referred to the 10 per cent deduction on earned incomes up to $8,000, and steeper surtaxes on the higher income brackets, approved by the committee Thursday.

Action providing a retaliatory tax against foreign concerns whose home countries discriminate against American branch corporations was sponsored by Representative Fred M. Vinson (Democrat), Kentucky.

After proper showings of fact, that these countries have discriminated against American concerns, the Secretary of the Treasury, with advice of the President, could increase levies up to 50 per cent against branches of concerns domiciled in the offending nations.

Change on Couples' Returns.

After reconsidering earlier committee action requiring married couples in all 48 States to file joint income-tax returns, the committee adopted a new section forcing joint returns only in States having community property laws.

The eight States affected are Washington, California, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, Nevada, Idaho and Arizona. The provision was adopted over the bitter opposition of Representative Hill, who holds it unconstitutional.

Under the rewritten section either husband or wife in those eight States must file a joint return for both, depending on which has the management of the estate. The rewritten section cuts down the revenue substantially below the $40,000,000 originally claimed.

Other sections of the tax-revision bill in its present form provide:

Substitution of a flat 4 per cent normal rate for the present 4 and 8 per cent rates, together with 27 surtax brackets, starting with 4 per cent on $4,000 incomes and graduated up to 59 per cent on incomes of $1,000,000.

A 10 per cent deduction for earned income on income up to $8,000, with the first $3,000 presumed to be earned. This would cut down revenues from the normal and surtax schedules to $26,000,000.

A limitation of capital losses to capital gains, under a sliding scale computing gains and losses according to length of time a property is held. This would yield about $13,000,000 in new revenues.

Continuation of present depreciation allowances.

Partnership tax laws tightened, limiting capital losses of a partnership to capital gains, forbidding individual partners from using any excess capital losses as deduction against their personal returns, and preventing a partnership from escaping the capital gains tax by stepping up the price of a property acquired from one of the partners.

Other Provisions.

Imposition of a 35 per cent tax on the undistributed adjusted income of personal holding companies, yielding $25,000,00 in new revenue.

Increased dividends out of earnings made prior to March 1, 1913, to surtax charge; yielding $6,000,000 annually.

Increased penalty for filing consolidated income tax returns from 1 per cent above the regular rate, to 2 per cent; yielding $40,000,000 annually.

Allowed 50 per cent credit for taxes paid foreign government, against income taxes paid in the United States, instead of present 100 per cent allowance. This would yield $5,000,000.

Eliminated provisions in present law permitting corporations to reorganize without recognizing gains in income for tax purposes; cut down the number of loopholes under which reorganized corporations may indefinitely postpone payment of tax.

Dillinger Bravado Broken by Chains

"John Dillinger!" The mob chief refused to speak or rise.

"Officer," Budlong ordered, "stand the man up!"

Dillinger was yanked to his feet protesting "No! I ain't Dillinger!"

Pierpont attempted to laugh off the disturbance when his name was called. He stood and chuckled, saying; "I guess that must be me."

As the prisoners were led back to their cells Dillinger and the Martin woman smiled at each other. The gang chief raised her chin in his hand and kissed her.

Racine, Wis., officials said they might seek to extradite the gangsters and the women in connection with the $27,000 robbery of the American Bank & Trust Co. there last November.

Indians First to Act.

In Gary, Ind., Dillinger and John Hamilton, one of the alleged members of the gang still at large, were indicted on murder charges, the result of another bank robbery. Indiana officers left to return the boss outlaw and his henchmen.

Indianapolis authorities named Mary Kinder as an accomplice in the plot by which Makley, Clark, Pierpont and seven other convicts broke out of the Indiana State prison last fall to start a reign of terror in the Middle West.

In Lima, Ohio, Makley, Clark and Pierpont are wanted on charges of delivering Dillinger from jail and shooting to death Sheriff Jess Sarber. Dillinger also is wanted for murder in east Chicago, Ind.

$36,000 Found on Prisoners.

The Indiana authorities computed the cash loot of the Dillinger gang at $250,000, adding that much of it had empowered them to carry on their terror reign.

Police here found a total of $36,000 on the four men when they were searched.

Alertness of two firemen who helped Clark and Makley move their belongings from a burning hotel here last Monday led to the capture of the gang. The next day the firemen, William Benedict and Robert Freeman, saw pictures of the gang in a magazine, recognized the pair and informed police.

The one casualty in the coup was a policeman's broken finger. That happened when Miss Long slammed a door on his hand.

Stopped by Stop Sign.

Visalia, Calif. (U.P.).—Leo Schultz, 30, linotype operator for the Visalia Times-Delta, walking home after work and minding his own business, received a fractured skull and other injuries when a boulevard "Stop" sign fell on him.

Frozen Fish Revived.

Medford, Mass. (U.P.).—During a recent cold spell Mrs. Henry Cameron found her two goldfish incased in ice in their globe in the sun parlor. She took the bowl into a warm room and 30 minutes later both fish were swimming around, unconcerned.

Full Benefits Of Production Cuts Visioned

Tugwell Terms Emergency Measures Only Start on Basic Policy.

Cincinnati, Jan. 26 (AP).—Emergency measures to curtail production, Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell said tonight, are from the basic policy of the Roosevelt Administration in its recovery plans.

Dr. Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, spoke before a forum sponsored by the University of Cincinnati.

What steps have been taken to curtail production, he declared, are purely temporary measures to get business moving. That accomplished, the Administration, he said, then hopes to readjust agricultural and industrial affairs "in such a way as to make avatilable to everybody the benefits and economies of mass production."

New Policy of Action.

The "philosophy of the New Deal," he said, is one of action, as opposed to the old order, which he said held that "natural" forces would solve matters of themselves, and "that all we needed to do was to sit tight, hold everything, and await results."

But there has been "no attempt to bootleg allen political philosophies into out democracy," he declared.

"Ever since we have had time to take stock of the first fruits of the new deal in action, people have been anxiously asking themselves where we are going.

"On the one hand, some have been induced to believe by the humanitarian aspects of the emergency legislation that a small group of administrative conspirators have been working in the dark to hand the country over to the Socialists.

Harmony in Leadership.

"On the other hand, some have noted the presence in the Government of many experienced business executives and have entertained fears lest the National Recovery Administration should develop into a system of Fascism."

Despite swift actions taken, all has not been harmony behind the Washington scene, he admitted.

"It would be idle to pretend that there have not been strong differences of opinion as to the type of action required, but there always has been complete unity of opinion and purpose as to the need of action, the possibilit yof action, and the efficacy of action in our political upon the social and economic forces of depression."

Skaters Seek Title Before 15,000 Fans

Oconomowoc, Wis., Jan. 26 (AP).—Favored by weather perfect for skaters and spectators alike, 15,000 persons were expected tomorrow to watch 75 crack bladesmen from nine States and Canada compete for the North American speed skating championship over the six-lap Fowler Lake course.

Skaters will compete for the 10 individual titles in four divisions. Fifteen final events are on tomorrow's card and 10 are scheduled for Sunday.

The ice measured 14 inches, and the surface was hard and fast.

Favored to take the title held by Ross Robinson, of Toronto, who has deserted skating ranks since he won the North American in 1930, the last year it was staged, are Eddie Schroeder, of Chicago; Bill Logan, of St. Johns, N. B.; Jim Webster, of St. Paul; Bert Taylor, of New York, and Eddie Wedge, of Detroit.

Reports Favor Bill to Abolish Hopewell Court

Assembly Committees Urge Passage; Protested by City's Bar.

Richmond, Jan. 26 (AP).—A bill to abolish the Hopewell Corporation Court was favorably reported last night by the courts of justice committees of both the House of Delegates and the Senate, after a public hearing.

The Senate committee reported the bill by a 11 to 3 vote. The House committee vote was 15 to 2.

Several members of the Hopewell Bar Association opposed the bill, and two members supported it. David Harrison, one member, spoke for it, and Senator W. D. Rogers read an "unsolicited" letter from Archer Jones, another member of the bar.

Court Termed Necessary.

Opposition to the bill was conducted by Harry Porter, who produced a dozen or more witnesses who testified there was a need for the court, over which Judge Thomas B. Robertson, storm center in a "competency" fight two years ago, presides.

Judge Robertson is up for reelection before this Assembly.

Committees set Wednesday afternoon for a special hearing on all seafood bills on the Chesapeake and its tributaries. The Senate insurance and banking committee referred to a subcommittee the Wicker-Tuck bill authorizing the State Corporation Commission, through the division of banking, to conduct all receiverships for State banks. Another special hearing was set on attempts to liberalize the blue laws for Tuesday night.

The House has received a bill by Delegates Stephens and Hodges, repealing the act for establishment and opration of the State Board of Motion Picture Censorship. The move followed closely the dismissal of Mrs. Emma Speed Sampson from the board and appointment of Mrs John Chalkley as her successor.

Child Labor Up.

Both houses received joint resolutions for the ratification of the child labor amendment, and for the appointment of a committee to make immediate investigations of reported "intolerable" conditions at State institutions for the insane.

The Assembly reelected a group of judges, whose candidacies were uncontested. They were: M. R. Peterson, J. T. Clements, C. V. Spratley, F. W. Coleman, Benjamin Hayden, and Walter Robertson. William Meade Fletcher was reelected to the State Corporation Commission.

A subcommittee of the House committee on schools and colleges was named to study a bill by Delegate White, of Albemarle, to abolish county school boards and school trustee electoral boards, and turn the work over to county boards of supervisors, effective June 30, 1934.

Second Term for Coleman.

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—Judge Frederick W. Coleman, reelected without opposition yesterday by the General Assembly, February 1 will begin his second 6-year term as judge of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit and the Fredericksburg Corporation Court.

8 Hearings Set On Park Tracts

Condemnation Pleas Will Be Completed by Courts Soon.

Front Royal, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.). The State Conservation Commission today announced dates fixed by the judges of the eight circuit courts in the Shenandoah National Park area for hearing the commission's applications for condemnation of all remaining tracts within the Kelsey line.

The hearing dates: Albemarle, February 19; Madison, February 20; Greene, February 21; Augusta, February 22; Rappahannock, February 23; Warren, February 24; Page, February 26, and Rockingham, February 28.

This order affects 200 tracts, not included in previous condemnation orders, to which exceptions to evaluations by park appraisers were filed by the owners. Decisions on these exceptions are expected to be announced by the two arbitration boards before February 19.

When these additional tracts have been condemned, 176,000 acres will have been acquired for park purposes, exceeding by 16,000 acres the minimum acreage required by the Federal Government.

Bristol, Va., Jan. 26 (AP).—The resignation of President Charles W. Henry, of King College, was accepted at a four-hour meeting of the board of trustees of the institution here yesterday. The resignation will become effective February 1.

Affairs of the college after Dr. Henry's departure will be handled by an acting head to be named by the trustees' executive committee next Monday. A new president will not be selected until next June.

Dr. Henry gave his reasons for leaving, among them being ill health, strenuous work of administration, and "constant hounding by certain individuals seeking to block my program from its outset."

Baskets of Books From Library Bring Joy to School Children

Substitute Plan Valued, But Missed During Vacation Time.

Teachers Make Selection According to Needs of Pupils.

By Felix Bruner.

Although the plan of sending baskets of selected books to school classrooms was started because schools had no other library facilities available, it has grown to be a valuable part of the library service and, according to Dr. George F. Bowerman, librarian, would never be abandoned, regardless of the growth of library facilities.

In a previous article, the volume of work done by the library in this connection was described. Perhaps not enough emphasis was put on the value of this work and the things it has accomplished.

The library service to schools was first undertaken when the library had no branches whatever. It was then regarded as a substitute to a certain extent for library service through branch libraries.

Sent on Teachers' Request.

"However," Dr. Bowerman said, "this service through the schools has developed to such a point and has proved so useful that I have long since come to the conclusion that if we had our full system of branch libraries developed, the service to the schools should still be carried on because of its utility in leading children to come to branch libraries and making lifelong library users of them."

Dr. Bowerman pointed out, however, that schools are not open on Saturdays and through the long vacation periods, when most of Washington's communities have no library service of any kind.

Books are sent to classrooms only when teachers request them. In such cases the teachers state in a general way what is desired, the number of pupils in her class, the grade of her class and the standing of the class, that is, whether the pupils are good readers or only fair and whether they are advanced or retarded. Books are chosen accordingly. One book is sent out for each child in the class and each class is allowed to keep its allotment of books for eight weeks. It has been found that in some classes the circulation of a group of books has equaled more than seven times the number of books sent out.

Class of Reading Checked.

A record is kept of the number of times each book is read, so that the librarians may judge the kind of books best suited for each particular class. If it is found that the class is reading the more advanced books, "stiffer" reading is sent out upon the next request.

For this purpose, the library now has nearly 50,000 volumes, including about 1,700 different titles. About half are fiction. The books are selected with a view to the reading tastes and abilities of the children of the second, through the ninth grade, that is through junior high schools.

Most of the nonfiction books are closely coordinated in subject matter with the curriculum. The books of fiction are partly connected with the subject matter of the curriculum and partly are just good reading. From the collection of 50,000 volumes last year there was a recorded circulation of 478,315. This represents a turnover of nearly 10 per volume.

Central Collection.

In a room in the Central Library one copy of each of the books in the school collection is shelved. Some teachers visit this room to familiarize themselves with the titles and perhaps to suggest titles that they would like sent to their classrooms.

"Over a term of years," Dr. Bowerman said, "the teachers who use this service have come to have such confidence in the library staff in charge of this work that they more and more send in their orders saying: 'You know better what I need than I do myself. Make up the collection to fit my class.'

"Teachers are enthusiastic over this service as are the children themselves. Many teachers say that they could not go on with their work without this service. In many cases they report that slow or backward children have their interest in their work quickened by the reading of a well-chosen book. The arrival of the library's book truck with a basket of books is hailed almost as an off-season Christmas."

This service is not confined to the public schools but is extended to private and parochial schools.

Advance Orders.

Librarians and teachers from all parts of the country have studied this part of the work of the Washington Library. The extent to which teachers approve the service was indicated this year when 150 teachers sent in their requests for books in August and early September, before school opened, so that the books would be available on the opening day. More than 1,000 teachers have asked for this classroom service.

In the library journal of January 1 was printed a paper by two members of the Washington Library staff, Miss Charlotte H. Clark, supervisor of the work with schools, and Miss Louise P. Latimer, director of the work with children. This article is called "The Taxpayer and Reading for Children: Would a Library in Every School Justify the Cost?". The writers show that the type of service given in Washington costs annually only one-fifteenth as much as separate libraries in school buildings.

Under the Washington system a school of 700 children may have from 3,000 to 3,500 books sent them during the school year.

State Senate Vetoes Hopes Of Tax Delay

West Virginia Solons Cite Fiscal Status Denying Extension.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.). The Senate today blasted the hopes of thousands of taxpayers for time extension or repeal of the 1933 income tax, by directing that it be paid by Wednesday, unless extension is granted by the State tax commissioner.

The action was taken while the House was ready to consider a bill prepared by Delegate John P. Beacom (Democrat), Cabell, calling for a mandatory extension of payment to March 1 and was offered in place of the resolution voted down by the Senate yesterday after House approval.

Without dissent the Senate adopted a resolution, declaring that it "does not contemplate a repeal with retroactive effect of any of the revenue statutes now existing," including the personal gross income tax, and advised all taxpayers to "make their remittances to the proper collecting authorities within the time specified."

The resolution stated that the fiscal affairs of the State are in such condition as to make it impossible to abate any taxes for the past year.

The income tax calls for the payment of 1 per cent of gross incomes above $600 in the case of single persons and above $1,000 for married persons, with a further exemption of $200 for each dependent. It has been received with a storm of protest all over the State and was branded a "bread and butter tax."

Senator Charles E. Hodges (Democrat), Monongalia, said even if the tax were now repealed it would not be made retroactive for 1933. The extension was sought because the House has passed a bill supplanting the gross income tax with a net tax based on half the sum paid in Federal income taxes. The Senate is yet to act on this, but its decision today leaves the old law effective for 1933.

Both branches of the Legislature recessed today, until February 5, after approving a plan for the installment payment of floating debts of governmental subdivisions. These comprise companion bills to the new tax collection law, which is due for a Supreme Court test during the recess. The bills provide, in cases of necessity, for the spread of floating indebtedness over a period of ten years, for the limitation of the use of no-fund drafts in accordance with a recent Supreme Court decision and for a commission of three in each county to pass upon the validity of floating debts.

Survey Begun On Pollution

Sewage Facilities Studied in Hampton Roads and Vicinity.

Newport News, Va., Jan. 26 (AP). While the pollution problem was being argued by factions proposing and opposing legislative remedy, the United States Public Health Service worked today to determine the extent of pollution in the Hampton Roads sector.

The work, financed by the health service at a cost of $25,000, is under the direction of H. R. Croherst, sanitary engineer. His headquarters are at the Marine Hospital in Norfolk.

The preliminary survey includes investigation of physical sewage equipment of Newport News, Norfolk, Hampton, Phoebus, Portsmouth, and Suffolk.

Meanwhile, R. B. Preston, of Norfolk, member of the State public works administration board, announced that action for legislative enactment of a program for abatement or elimination of pollution in Hampton Roads will be taken by the Virginia advisory board and by the Virginia board of the Chesapeake Bay Authority.

H. C. Byrd Firm Sued by Dealer On Lumber Bill

University Official Denies He Ordered Material From G. N. Bowen.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 26 (Spl.). The Frederick County Circuit Court yesterday took under consideration the $2,212.44 suit brought by George N. Bowen, Hyattsville lumber dealer, against the College Park (Md.) Corporation. Judge Arthur D. Willard presided.

The College Park Corporation is headed by H. C. (Curley) Byrd, vice president and athletics director of the University of Maryland.

Bowen alleged that early in 1929 the corporation through its superintendent, Walter C. Johnson, ordered the lumber and millwork for five new houses. The material was delivered and the defendant refused to accept it, he said.

Byrd testified, that while he told Bowen the estimated price of the material was satisfactory, he signed no agreement and entered into no formal contract. At the time of delivery, he declared he notified Bowen it should not have been delivered and asked him to take it back.

Bowen testified that the material was specially prepared for the houses and was useless for other purposes. Two witnesses for the plaintiff and three for the defendant also were heard.

The case was removed from the Prince Georges County Circuit Court to the Frederick jurisdiction at the request of the plaintiff, who contended he could not obtain an impartial trial in Prince Georges County.

Orange County Helped Greatly By CWA Funds

$30,000 Program Boon to Area, and Curtailment Is Regretted.

Orange, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—Orange County has benefited to date by expenditure of practically $30,000 in CWA funds, the largest single beneficial program for this area since the 1929 slump, it was estimated today.

The program has meant disbursement in this county of $19,000 for labor and $10,000 for materials, and 500 active workers of the 1,800 registered unemployed have shared this fund.

Although the original allocation of funds for employment of Orange labor called for 52,760 man hours, this quota later was raised to 62,000.

The recent Nation-wide order, curtailing CWA work and halving hours per week, has meant a severe blow to this area.

Lexington Program Busy.

Lexington, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—The CWA program is rapidly moving forward here. Streets have been resurfaced and the stadium and lake being built at the high school are nearing completion. The pay roll for last week was $6,511.65, the largest since the work started. Some recently approved projects have not been started, due to the curtailing order. The Virginia Military Institute has applied for CWA funds to build a gun shed.

Danville Asks Bridge Aid.

Danville, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—Bids will be called next month for rebuilding Union Street Bridge with funds from the National Relief for Municipalities, granted to several Virginia cities for improving Federal roads within corporate limits.

The allocation to Danville is $85,000, most of which will be absorbed in widening the bridge.

Safety Course Finished.

Bristol, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.). Twenty-nine CWA workers, 10 each from Washington and Russell Counties and 9 from Scott County, Va., completed the Red Cross first-aid course.

The CWA penalty, of Bristol, Tenn., imposed by State officials for an apparent excess in the quota of men allowed to be worked, now stands to be materially reduced, Commissioner Arthur Green says.

Winchester Fair Dates Set Though Buildings Are Razed

Property Long Sold, But State Body Slates Event Anyhow.

Winchester, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.). The Virginia Association of Fairs, in annual session at Richmond set October 9, 10, 11 and 12 as the dates for the 1934 Winchester Fair—but it's all news to people here, where the fairgrounds properties were sold under receivership more than a year ago.

After being operated under a receivership in 1931 the Winchester Fairgrounds were ordered sold. The Farmers & Merchants National Bank & Trust Co. of Winchester purchased the 22 acres of the fairgrounds within the corporate limits of Winchester. The bank since has had several of the buildings dismantled. It was stated today that all of the exhibition buildings, stables, and other structures also will be razed.

For 100 years the Winchester fair was one of the outstanding agricultural exhibitions of the Shenandoah Valley. Some years ago the fair was changed from October to August and farmers and orchardists thereafter placed few exhibits, claiming that the apples and farm crops were not mature in August.

Winchester inaugurated the Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival in 1924. From year to year the attendance at the apple fete, held in the spring, has increased, while that of the fair has decreased.

Banker Hunted Here 11 Days

Relatives Raise Reward for Virginian Who Vanished on Way to Capital.

Search here and in southwestern Virginia has been intensified for W. T. Doosing, former member of the Virginia Legislature, and banker of Shawsville, Va., who disappeared January 15 after leaving for a visit to his sister in this city.

Relatives, fearing he is either an amnesia victim or had been waylaid and robbed, have increased their reward offer for Mr. Doosing's safe return to $600.

Detective Sergt. Floyd A. Truscott has been assigned to the local search. Miss Tillie Doosing, an employe of the Veterans' Bureau, of 4927 Kansas avenue northwest, is the sister Mr. Doosing was coming here to visit.

Mr. Doosing was seen at the railroad station in Roanoke, Va., on January 15. He bought a ticket for the Capital.

Contempt Action Weighed.

Bluefield, W. Va., Jan. 26 (AP). A citation for contempt of court charging negligence in the escape of two Federal prisoners against Sheriff J. C. Fanning, of Mercer County, and C. W. Thornton, a former Mercer County jailer, has been taken under advisement by Federal Judge George W. McClintic.

Virginia Court Delays Verdicts In County Rows

Adjourns to Leave Henrico, Albemarle Affairs in Confusion.

Richmond, Jan. 26 (AP).—The Virginia Supreme Court adjourned today until March 13 without deciding the controversies in Henrico and Albemarle Counties on the length of time certain officials should hold office.

The controversy in Henrico arose over the terms of the incumbent supervisors, and that in Albermarle over the county treasurer's term.

Adjournment without a decision came as a surprise, affairs of both counties, especially Henrico's, will be in considerable confusion.

The county manager plan, adopted in September, was to have become effective January 1. Refusal of incumbent supervisors to make way for those elected in November halted the change in government.

An appeal was taken by the newly elected board from a decision of Judge ulian Gunn that the incumbent board was entitled to sit for two more years, and launch the county manager plan themselves. Meanwhile affairs of the county are being administered under the old system.

In Albermarle County the question is the term of Treasurer Stuart Hamm, who declined to relinquish that post after Albermarle voted in the county executive form of government last year.

Falsh Dims

Two Bandits Get $1,200 Money, Return $10.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.), State and Preston County police today are investigating the hold-up of Ulysses Grant Price, 70, Tunnelton farmer, near Caddell.

Sheriff Charles D. Brown said the two youthful bandits had been traced to Oakland.

Price, who recently received $2,000 insurance money for the burning of his home, yesterday decided to draw $1,200 from a bank at Albright so he could "carry a fat roll." On his way home the masked bandits took the roll, but returned $100 of it to him.

League Forms To Fight Long Public Terms

Maryland Group Warns Continuance in Office Is Dangerous.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—Declaring it is essential for the continued success of the Democratic party in Maryland that the warning of the State bill of rights against long terms in office be observed, the Maryland Democratic League has been organized here with representatives from practically every county and Baltimore City.

Although Gov. Albert Ritchie's name was not mentioned in the announcement, he is now serving his fourth four-year term, and it was obvious his office is one of the objects of the league's declaration.

The organization, which tentatively had been formed as the Progressive League, was given definite form at a four-hour meeting last night in Carvel Hall, and the name changed to avoid any misunderstanding.

Clarence W. Miles, Baltimore, was elected president and Fuller Bernard, Allegany County; Wilmer Cronin, Harford County; Clarence M. Roberts, Prince Georges County; Senator W. Earle Withgott, Talbot County, and Leonard Weinberg, Baltimore, vice presidents. Edward H. Burke was named secretary-treasurer.

A resolution was adopted outlining qualifications for candidates and expressing the belief that there are many outstanding Democrats in the State who meet these requirements. The resolution also said, "It is essential to the future success of the Democratic party in this State that it take cognizance of the admonition in the Declaration of Rights adopted by the people of Maryland" that long continuance in the executive departments of power and trust is dangerous to liberty.

Under its by-laws, the league will support candidates indorsed by a two-thirds vote of the executive committee and supported by a majority vote of the board of governors.

The board of governors consists of representatives from each county and Baltimore city. Roberts is the board member from Prince Georges County, and Edward Peter from Montgomery County.

Pinchot Declines to Give Up Virginia Suspect.

Danville, Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—One of Gov. Peery's first demands on a sister State to yield custody of a man accused of crime has been refused by Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania.

Police Lieut. O. S. Mayberry returned last night from Harrisburg without his man—Walter G. Gibson, colored, wanted here on a charge of deserting his wife.

Arriving at Philadelphia, where Gibson had been arrested, the officer found he had retained counsel and was resisting removal. A hearing was held before the Pennsylvania government, which made an issue of the fact that five years had elapsed before pressing the desertion charge. Gibson was found to have steady employment in the plant of a Philadelphia radio manufacturer. According to the Danville officer. The hearing ended with Gov. Pinchot saying that he would

Buddies Rescue CCC Quartet From "Dead Man's" Cave Hike

Had Been in Cave for 9 Hours Without Food or Water.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—A story of near tragedy, involving several Martinsburg youths, lost in "Dead Man's Cave," came here today from the CCC Camp at Glady, Va.

A group of four boys left the Laurel Fork Camp Sunday morning for an exploration trip to the cave. Legend has it the cave was once the hiding place of desperate criminals. The exploration party was made up of Elmo Markle and Henry Flowers, both of Martinsburg, and Leo Fix and Forest Hall, Fayette County.

When the boys failed to return in the evening their camp mates became apprehensive and a group of eight secured permission to use a Forest Service truck in search for the lads. Footprints were discovered leading in but none out, and every passageway was searched in vain. Finally an opening so small was found that the boys had to wriggle through on their stomachs.

Farther on they entered a large room where they found the missing quartet.

The lost boys admitted they had about given up hope of finding their way out. They had been in the cave for nine hours without food or water. The air was bad and it was said the boyys could not have long survived.

Among the members of the rescuing party were Barnett Smallwood and Charles Townsend, of this city.

Virginia Bill Aimed At Audit Dispute

Arlington and Fairfax Men Support Measure.

Richmond, Jan. 26 (Spl.).—Half of county auditing expenses would be paid by the State under a bill offered in the Assembly today by Delegate C. E. Steuart, Stratford.

Support for the measure was pledged by delegates from Arlington and Fairfax Counties, involved in recent controversy over whether the State or counties should pay such bills.

Arlington County has refused to pay more than $9,000 of $18,00 for auditing which resulted in discoveries of shortages and conviction of two officials. County authorities contended the irregularities should have ben reported sooner through State inspection of books. Fairfax County denied responsibility for a similar auditing bill.

The Senate general laws committee favorably reported the economy committee bill authorizing the governor to consolidate State divisions and agencies and equalize salaries of State employes. The bill goes on the Senate calendar for Monday.

"Slap at Roosevelt" Protested.

Acting on a request from Tidewater Assemblymen, seeking to have the highway commission act as an agency for the construction and operation of a toll bridge over York River at Yorktown, Gov. Peery today announced his approval of the policy.

The tax bill was introduced by Senator A. P. Staples, of Roanoke, who said he regarded the bill as a means of shifting some of the real estate tax burden to the other sources outlined in the measure.

The waterways resolution was introduced in the Senate by Senator Saxon W. Holt, of Newport News, who said the treaty was detrimental to commercial interests of Virginia, especially in the Hampton Roads area. It was passed in the Senate over protest of Senator Cecil Conor, who said it was a slap at President Roosevelt, and over a move by Senator John Wicker, of Richmond City, who asked that the vote be deferred until Monday.

"Cross Country Cruise" Opens Auspiciously at Rialto—Midnight Shows Coming

Semi-Serious Film Is Based On Bus Travel

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

"CROSS COUNTRY CRUISE." Universal picturization of a story by Stanley Rauh, adapted to the screen by Elmer Rice, featuring Lew Ayres, June Knight, Alan Dinehart, Minna Gombell, Eugene Pallette, Robert McWade, Alice White and Henry Armetta. Directed by Eddie Buzzell. Reviewed Thursday evening.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Here is the twin of "Fugitive Lovers," identical in contour and different only in the complexion of its incident.

The difference in the complexion of incident, however, is quite a difference, indeed, and in the view of this typewriter is all in favor of the present subject, disclosed for the first time in Washington on the screen of the Rialto Theater yesterday.

"Cross Country Cruise" is a considerably more naturalistic study of the comforts, discomforts and comedy possibilities of transcontinental bus travel than "Fugitive Lovers." It encompases a well-sustained and plausible story until the last few feet, when, like its earlier counterpart, it goes suddenly melodramatic and contrives a slightly fantastic murder to serve as the basis of its climax.

Begins in New York.

The story begins in New York with a clandestine rendezvous between a married man and a girl who is unaware that he is not single, as he has misrepresented himself to be. She is also pursued aboard the California bus by a gay young man who has made her acquaintance while attempting to sleep off the consequences of a large night in his Rolls Royce, parked beside the bus. The wife of her older suitor also decides to make the trip and thus we acquire the necessary quartet to generate constantly mounting animosity, bitter jealousy and dangerous rivalry, leading, perhaps more or less naturally, to the husband's killing of his wife under most unusual circumstances that are not discovered until the bus has had ample time to proceed from Denver to the Pueblo country in Arizona—or possibly it is New Mexico.

For comedy relief, there are Alice White, a penniless showgirl, romancing her way across the country from ocean to ocean by dint of a vast self-complacence and the susceptibility of the various drivers, and Eugene Pallette, a spouting fountain of misinformation, whose way with the women is finally effectually defiated by his casual arrest for bigamy! In "Fugitive Lovers," it will be recalled, the Eugene Pallette was Ted Healy. Honors are about shared equally between them.

Realistic Treatment.

By a shrewd introduction of road maps and the frequent occurrence of scenes that bear all of the evidences of authentic travel from city to city, "Cross Country Cruise" takes on a considerable quality of actuality and breaks the monotony of too strict a limitation of pictured action to the interior of a passenger bus—which, at best, is none too large a stage for the depiction of sustained plot development.

Universal has done an excellent bit of casting in assigning the pivotal roles of this still new form of story-telling. Lew Ayres and June Knight appear as the young lovers, whose attachment had its inception with a brief flirtation, and Alan Dinehart and Minna Gombell are cast as the older suitor and the wife into whose back he shoots an arrow in the sports department of a big Denver department store. These are all competent people, Mr. Ayres particularly, revealing a facility in light comedy that he has not heretofore betrayed.

The Old Crab!

Alice White and Eugene Pallette are, of course, engaging funsters and Robert McWade is perfectly suited as the irascible old crab, to be found in every party of travelers, whose chief pleasure is hailing all his associates and everything they do either with a snarl or a lusty Bronx cheer!

The remainder of the long cast labor in comparatively minor capacities.

The auxiliary attractions this week are not so abundant as usual. The Universal News, with Graham McNamee's illuminating comment, and "A Little Backward," an uncouth comedy, ostensibly starring Vince Barnett, who is not yet up to starring even in short-reel comedies, are the only supplementaries of a feature that takes rank as the best, to date, of its type.

Announcement is made that the Philadelphia Harmonica Band, one of the outstanding organizations of its kind in the United States, will give a single special concert on the stage of Loew's Fox Theater at the last show on the evening of Tuesday, January 30. Albert N. Hoxie, its founder and director, has personally taught the 50 youngsters of various ages comprising this unique rival of Borrah Minnevitch and his Harmonica Rascals. He has brought his proteges to a position of National prominence.

To Honor Home Staters.

From Bernard Simon comes this interesting summary of an important event soon to be celebrated in the National Capital:

As a gesture of welcome to visitors from his home State, Senator William Gibbs McAdoo will give a luncheon in one of the private dining rooms of the Capitol on February 2, in honor of the Moulin Rouge Caravan, the group of well-known motion-picture stars, who will pay a two-day visit to Washington to signalize the presentation of the motion picture, "Moulin Rouge," at the Palace Theater.

Counting chorus girls of the troupe, as well as the film stars, approximately 30 Hollywood film personalities are traveling in the Caravan, which is beginning a Nation-wide tour by automobile in this city. The Caravan's passengers are due to arrive here direct from California by train. From this city they will proceed in the special fleet of automobiles which has been commissioned for the trip. With Washington more than ever the center of the Nation these days, it was only appropriate that the itinerary for the coast-to-coast trip to be arranged as to begin here.

To Visit Capitol.

As is the case with most of the other prominent visitors to Washington, one of the first considerations of the film players will be to pay a visit to the Capitol, and this has been arranged for, so that the players will drop into the visitors' gallery of the House of Representatives for an hour prior to the McAdoo luncheon.

A number of members of Congress, as well as representatives of the press, are expected to attend this luncheon, the proceedings of which will be broadcast over two radio stations.

Travel as Unit.

During the entire time that the motion picture stars are in Washington, they will travel about the city as a group in the fleet of cars which compose the caravan and which have been especially decorated in silver and blue so as to be distinctive as a unit.

The tour of the "Moulin Rouge" Caravan will proceed from Washington to Baltimore and thence to Philadelphia, Newark, New York and Boston before it starts west on its long trek back to California.

Stopping by to pay a friendly good-by call last night Fifi D'Orsay and her husband, Maurice Hill, made known the disquieting fact that Fifi has been forced to abandon all idea of appearing in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "In Old Louisiana" and fulfill her vaudeville booking in Philadelphia next week instead. To secure her par in the picture, Mlle. D'Orsay would have been compelled to leave Washington for the Coast immediately after last night's final performance. As it was, she and her bridegroom of six weeks left by motor car for the City of Brotherly Love, which one gathers, is not precisely the way the fiery Fifi feels about the town at the moment! However, she is glad of anything that will remove her from Capt. Proske's pretty tigers! They scare her stiff.

That Midnight Show.

The stage hands and motion picture operators who will see to the proper running of the technical side of the midnight performance to be presented at Loew's Fox, January 30, and the musicians who will comprise so important a feature of the bill, all have volunteered to donate their services so that the entire proceeds of the special bill may be devoted to the President's Warm Springs Foundation, according to announcement made yesterday by Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's, chairman of the publicity committee. Approximately 25 stage hands, 5 operators and 50 musicians will be required for the entertainment in which all of the local theaters are pooling their interests.

Tickets on Sale.

Four thousand tickets for the performance, which will include the combined stage shows of the Fox and Earle Theaters, with a nationally known theatrical figure acting as master of ceremonies, went on sale in all Washington theaters Wednesday.

The tickets were printed free of charge by the L. G. Kelly Printing Co.

Each ticket will be sold at the flat price of $1. No seats will be reserved. The performance will begin promptly at 11:30 p. m., and is expected to last not less than two hours and a half, which is a very ample dollar's worth, indeed.

Those who paid strict attention to the development of "Eight Girls in a Boat," the recent screen feature at Loew's Fox, and watched the faces on the screen closely recognized two old favorites of former years—one a veteran of the old silent days; the other a youngster just taking a second grip on a motion picture career. They were Stuart Holmes, long looked upon as the cinema's leading "heavy," and "Baby Peggy," otherwise Peggy Montgomery, a young woman in whom a strong resemblance to the erstwhile infant prodigy still remains.

More Tickets.

Speaking of tickets for special midnight shows, the pasteboards for the late-hour preview of the new Constance Bennett musical romance, "Moulin Rouge," at Loew's Palace Theater next Thursday midnight, at which the entire "Moulin Rouge Caravan" entourage will make its first Washington appearance, are now on sale at all of the Loew theaters—Fox, Palace and Columbia.

There will be no advance in the usual scale of prices, the management wishes to emphasize, despite the unusual character of the all-star added attraction.

In "Moulin Rouge," Miss Bennett is cast in a dual role and is ably supported by Franchot Tone, who seems momentarily to have evaded Miss Crawford's watchful eye, and Tulio Carminati, who oscillates with some regularity between stage and screen.

Reverting briefly to the unique screen entertainment on view at the Metropolitan, the period in which "Son of Kong" is purportedly laid is rather accurately revealed by the background music in some of its preliminary scenes. In the honky-tonks along the China Sea, one hears an invisible piano playing "The Maple Leaf Rag" and "The Glow Worm." That would be along about the turn of the century—so one hears!

Fan Dance!

By the way, who pitched yesterday?

The Czech Who Checks in as Cinema Star Today

Having scored an emphatic success upon the Broadway stage, Francis Lederer, young Czechoslovakian actor, has turned to the screen as an outlet for his talents with equally happy results. He makes his local debut today as star of "Man of Two Worlds," with Elissa Landi in the principal feminine role, on the silver sheet at RKO-Keith's Theater. This picture recently scored at the Radio City Music Hall in New York.

The latter finally declared a tie vote and no election. To break the deadlock, the Legislature passed a bill to cover such contingencies and applying particularly to the local situation, giving the governor appointive rights.

Prison Threat Took $30,000, Parents Claim

Ask Return, Saying Bank Agreed Not to Punish Embezzling Son.

Westminster, Md., Jan. 26 (Spl.).—Charging that the Pleasant Valley Bank forced them to pay about $30,000 on threats of criminal prosecution of their son, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel E. Crouse gave testimony here this week in Circuit Court in their plea that the money be returned.

The son, Nevin W. Crouse, was convicted in the May term of Circuit Court here for embezzlement from the bank of which he was cashier, and was sentenced to the Maryland House of Correction for three years.

Testimony in the present equity case was given before a full bench composed of Chief Judge Francis Neal Park and Associate Judges William H. Forsythe, jr., and Nicholas H. Green.

The couple declared that agents of the bank represented that their son would be sent to the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary for 20 years, but that if they would pay the bank $12,921.10 they had on deposit and would give a note for $17,000 more there would be no criminal prosecution and no publicity given to his default.

They declared that as a result of such coercion and duress they paid the money, executed the note and delivered collateral securities to the bank. The present suit claims the bank thus acted unlawfully, and asks that the bank return the deposit note and collateral.

The bank denied the charges of duress, but admits it did obtain $30,317.64 from the couple to offset their son's obligations.

"Santa Claus" Capone.

A prisoner just released from the Federal Penitentiary told the Atlanta Journal that Al Capone, once our best known gangster, is a "nice man" who figuratively put on whiskers Christmas Day and distributed boxes filled with candy, cake and tobacco to his fellow prisoners.

Before we Americans, notoriously sentimental in such matters, begin signing petitions seeking pardon for genial Al, another picture may be recalled. A district attorney in Chicago is digging into the truth of racketeering, in a trial now under way. Testimony shows that Capone stepped into the cleaning and dyeing business, served notice that he was taking over its "protection" and made himself master. He didn't do it by giving proprietors of cleaning establishments boxes filled with cakes and candies. He offered them their choice: Either they could give in and split profits with him, "or else." People who defied Capone came to find out that his "else" was likely to be delivered from a gun barrel or in a "pineapple" that would blow up a store and anybody who happened to be around when the pineapple was delivered.

It is not unlikely that the Christmas boxes for the Atlanta prisoners were bought with money extorted from Chicago pressers and those whose pants they pressed.

Old Age Pensions.

Enactment of an old-age pension law for the District has been temporarily delayed by the House District Committee, but there are many indications that favorable action will be taken as soon as the District Commissioners have had an opportunity to report on the measure. The committee certainly ought not to be censured for its deference to the Commissioners. It would be highly inappropriate to recommend a bill of such importance to the House without ascertaining the views of District officials.

Extensive consideration was given two old-age pension bills by a subcommittee on public health, hospitals and charity. This committee appeared to be concerned chiefly with the relative merits of the two measures rather than the principle of caring for aged indigents in their homes. Since the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains is overcrowded, and the day of building poorhouses has passed, it seems to be taken for granted that legislation of this type is essential.

The bill recommended by the subcommittee would provide an allowance of not more than $9 per week, including income from all sources, for indigents over 60 years of age. After much discussion the full committee raised the age limit to 65 years. This more nearly corresponds to the provisions of State laws on this subject. In most States an individual is not eligible for an old-age pension until he has reached 68 or 70 years.

In comparison with old-age pensions in the States the $9 per week maximum allowance appears to be quite liberal. Living costs in Washington are above the average, however, since it is entirely metropolitan. Factors of this kind must be taken into consideration. The bill ought to be drawn to meet conditions here rather than to conform to any national average.

A rather limited survey under the auspices of the Citizens' Committee on Old-Age Security for the District suggests that the cost of caring for dependent old folks in this way will not be excessive. The experience of most States indicates that the pension system is less expensive than the institutionalization of aged indigents. If a reasonable and practical pension system is adopted Washington taxpayers will not complain of the cost of supporting residents who are left completely without resources in their declining years.

The Liquor Control Board.

Three members of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board have been appointed, and the District Commissioners have announced detailed regulations for control of the liquor traffic here. A few amendments to the law have been requested by President Roosevelt, but they are not of vital importance to its operation at present. Thus, the stage is all set for inauguration of the post-prohibition era in Washington on February 15.

Indications are that the board members have been chosen because of their experience and capacity for this work. Fears that political influences might be strong enough to thwart the Commissioners in their choice of board members proved to be unfounded. In this respect, as well as in the drafting of the liquor control act, the influence of the Commissioners has been predominant.

Although the control system which is going into effect here is adapted to the special requirements of the District, it will nevertheless be regarded as a model for many localities throughout the country. The Control Board and the Commissioners to whom that board is responsible have a fine opportunity to demonstrate that the liquor traffic can be regulated with moderation and decency.

Tinkering With Tax Laws.

A thoroughgoing reform of our system of Federal income taxation should have been undertaken when the country was prosperous and the Treasury in receipt of a surplus. In times of depression, with mounting budgetary deficits emphasizing the need for additional revenue, it is practically impossible to revise the income-tax law with a single-minded intention to correct basic defects both in the law and its administration. Unwillingness to sacrifice immediate income, and desire to add to inadequate revenues, necessarily color the views of legislators. They are almost compelled to advocate retention of impositions that should be eliminated and to add to levies that are already excessive.

As might have been expected, therefore, the recommendations of the House Ways and Means Committee do not deal with the problems presented by our faulty system of income taxation in a decisive way, with a determination to correct admitted evils. The committee proposed to add to the tax burdens of individuals in the higher income groups. Thus it emphasizes the class character of the present law, which is limited to a relatively small number of individual taxpayers and in the upper brackets is already perilously close to being confiscatory.

If Congress wishes to increase the revenues received from the income tax instead of making it an instrumentality for redistribution of national wealth, the rates must not be so high as to destroy the incentive to accumulate. Moreover, since the great body of taxpayers escape Federal taxation wholly or in good part, there is much to be said as a matter of equity, apart from revenue considerations, for a reduction of exemptions in the lower income-tax groups. In default of some kind of general sales tax, preferential treatment shown to small incomes is pronounced.

The Ways and Means Committee deserves credit for reversing its decision to curtail allowances for depreciation and depletion, upon the insistence of Secretary Morgenthau. It should also be commended for its refusal to incorporate a recommendation to make all tax-exempt income taxable, since that would have been a form of retroactive taxation. Nevertheless, assuming that the committee is correct in concluding that such a change would require a constitutional amendment, a recommendation to that effect might hasten a much needed reform. The likelihood of such action is unfortunately slight, so long as the borrowing program of the Government makes it appear desirable to increase the attractiveness of public offerings.

Certain provisions are obviously designed to prevent a continuance of practices that have resulted in a vast amount of tax evasion. Strictly speaking, however, the term "evasion" is a misnomer, since congressional investigations have shown that in some cases men of wealth have escaped paying income taxes through fraudulent devices and, in other cases, through taking advantage of loopholes in the tax laws which made non-payment legitimate.

The capital gain and loss provisions until recently have provided easy legal escape from payment of income taxes. Although the Ways and Means Committee has recommended changes which will close many of these escape outlets, it stops short of suggesting complete disregard of capital gains and losses for income-tax purposes—a reform which many tax experts consider desirable. Belief that retention of the present hybrid system will yield revenue that otherwise would be lost no doubt helps to explain the committee's attitude, as well as to account for the timid and opportunistic character of the general changes recommended.

Needed reforms will never be obtained until Congress ceases to tinker with the income-tax law and undertakes to rewrite it, considering it in relation to our national systems of taxation viewed as a whole.

Playing Up To Austria.

An enthusiastic Nazi, endeavoring to explain Hitler's accomplishments, is likely to say, among other things, "Hitler did in one year what Bismarck could not do in four decades: he wiped out state lines in Germany. He unified the country." Undoubtedly the Fuehrer has done a great deal toward breaking down the strong provincial feeling in the Reich, but cable dispatches indicate that he is not yet ready to decree the "unitarian state," which is one of his objectives.

Dispatches from Berlin, however, say that Tuesday's session of the Reichstag will not be ordered to approve a bill completely wiping out the old political units. It is reported that Hitler has been forced, either by internal dissension or by representations from President von Hindenburg, to abandon this idea for the time being. The measure to be introduced in the Reichstag will turn the police and judiciary in the 17 German states over to the central government, but it will permit them, as a sop, to retain their frontiers and their colors.

Commentators not subject to Nazi supervision may look further in finding reasons for Hitler's failure openly to decree his "unitarian state." It is probably not the resistance of Von Hindenburg, if indeed he has offered any. A more cogent reason, perhaps, is that the dictator realizes, as a native Austrian, that the greatest opposition in Austria to a union with Germany has come from those who resent Prussian overlordship.

Many Austrians have viewed with dismay the destruction of the autonomy of Bavaria and its complete subjection to the Berlin government. It would be much easier for the Austrian Nazis to seize power if they could argue that union with Germany would not involve the disappearance of the cultural independence of their country in a strongly centralized Reich.

Reaping The Whirlwind.

President Roosevelt is inclined to think that compulsory limitation of agricultural crops may be a necessary sequence to the AAA program. A few years ago farmers would have vigorously resented such an encroachment upon their freedom. But during the last ten months they have committed themselves to voluntary reduction of crops and many now feel that force is necessary to bring the noncooperating element into line.

At the beginning of the agricultural experiment Congress might have revolted at the idea of the Government telling every farmer how much cotton, wheat and corn he could produce. The first step was taken on the argument that something immediate had to be done for the farmer. After all, it was said, the Government was merely offering the farmer voluntary contracts for his own welfare. But as soon as the weaknesses of the voluntary system became apparent, leaders from the farm belt began to advocate stronger measures. By degrees we appear to be approaching a rigid system of Federal regulation for agriculture.

Secretary Wallace still looks askance at the compulsory system, yet his remarks carry the intimation that it may become necessary. If cotton prices make it profitable for farmers to abandon the cooperative plan, he said in a recent address, "there may be need for some sort of compulsion to prevent the piling up of unusable surpluses of cotton which have resulted in poverty and misery for the whole South." The Secretary admits that 10 or 15 per cent of the cotton producers in this country may, to some extent, "invalidate the efforts of the majority who may agree to reduce their acreage." "And there are rather insistent reports," he says, "that there is a real danger of this very thing happening this year."

Last summer 10,000,000 acres of cotton were plowed under. Yet a normal crop was harvested. This result is often referred to as a trick of nature, but the inclination of farmers to eliminate only the poorer acreage and to cultivate the remainder more assiduously must have been an important factor. In preparation for the coming season farmers are purchasing large quantities of fertilizer. New lands are being brought into cultivation. Farmers who left their land when cotton prices were low are rushing back to take advantage of Uncle Sam's generosity. In some localities, especially Texas, the new curtailment contracts are not being accepted as rapidly as was expected. The Administration is obviously perturbed over this situation.

Before taking any definite stand on compulsory acreage reduction Secretary Wallace is trying to determine the sentiment of farmers. He feels that "we should approach this sort of thing very carefully and only after thorough public debate." Contracting with farmers for acreage reduction and compulsory limitation of crops in accordance with edicts from Washington are very different matters. Secretary Wallace raises the question as to whether "the people themselves might find it (the compulsory system) repugnant and would, in the end, revolt against it."

Certainly, this is not an encouraging prospect. But it is the kind of situation which is all too likely to arise when hasty experimentation is inaugurated without any clear understanding of what the outcome may be. Unfortunately it is not yet apparent that the Administration has learned the homely truth of the old proverb: "Look before you leap."

Mr. Bailie Goes.

Despite the exchange of polite letters, the real reason Earl Bailie, special assistant to Secretary Morgenthau, left the Treasury yesterday was that Senators had decreed so. Mr. Bailie submitted his resignation two or three weeks ago and was retained, apparently, to see Mr. Morgenthau through his first financing operation.

With billions to be borrowed and at least two billions to be used for a "stabilization fund," and with a multitude of other problems confronting the Secretary, nobody has any desire to deprive him of expert advice. It was merely that Mr. Bailie was not, because of his financial record, the man the Senate wanted to do the advising.

Air Mail Contracts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The defense in The Post of January 22 by the president of Eastern Air Transport of the present air mail contract system ignores the alternative which it seems to me is certain to be adopted as soon as the question is thoroughly understood.

Entirely aside from the abuses which have been revealed as a result of the Black committee investigation, I believe the present system to be wrong in principle and certain to retard the development of air transport service from the standpoint of the traveling public.

The existing procedure is to award contracts for carrying the mail over each of the principal routes as a result of supposedly competitive bidding. The result is, of course, that only one contract is awarded over each route. The air transport companies claim (and I have no doubt the claim is correct) that they can not operate a passenger line at a profit without a mail subsidy from the Government. The inevitable result has been that lines which have not succeeded in getting air mail contracts have either ceased operation or have been forced to sell out or merge with lines that did obtain contracts. The result was inevitable and was predicted when the Waters Act was passed: namely, a monopoly of all of the principal air routes in the hands of a few companies. To those who believe in monopoly, therefore, the Waters Act and the air mail contract system are highly successful.

But it can not be disputed successfully that the act and the system have greatly curtailed service from the standpoint of the public. An example is Eastern Air Transport itself, which took over the Ludington Line between Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York. Before its absorption the Ludington Line ran hourly service, but now the Eastern Air has only a few planes each way each day. I am not criticizing the Eastern Air Transport, or any other particular company, but undoubtedly, from the standpoint of the public service, all of them would be improved by competition.

The alternative to the present system is to adopt the system which has been in effect for many years with respect to railway mail, where, in accordance with the Constitution, all railroads are declared by law to be "post roads," with the result that the Postmaster General may order any railroad to carry the mail. In consequence practically all railroads carry some mail, and the question of which railroads shall carry the more desirable mail is dependent altogether on competition in service. Rates are fixed, not by contract in most instances, but by the Interstate Commerce Commission after hearing. The result is that the railway mail system seems to work with complete satisfaction to all, competition is promoted, and I have never heard of any charges of favoritism.

If the air mail contract system were ended and the system now in effect on the railroads were applied in the air, the same results ought logically to follow and, in particular, competition in service ought to be promoted, with beneficial results for the traveling public.

Since the president of Eastern Air Transport in his article states that opposition to the present system comes from "certain foreign governments and some of the surface transportation interests," perhaps I should add that I have no special interest, legal or financial, direct or indirect, in any phase of the question. BRICE CLAGETT.

Political "Spoils."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You are quite right in insisting that the Library of Congress is "no place for spoils." But I can see no very good reason why some of the jobs in the Library should not go to the dominant party. Surely it would be most disastrous to use no discretion in this field, as it would in any other, but not all places in the Library are highly technical.

A few intelligent Democrats and Progressives added to the lump of all governmental activities at this time may actually be good leaven. If the New Deal means anything at all it means change, experiment, social and political opportunity. Obviously it can get nowhere if it must depend for its support upon thousands of Government officers who, converted by economic necessity into voting for it in 1932, still remain instinctively lukewarm and indifferent and ready to go back to their old allegiance as soon as the current runs counter or the emergency is passed.

Corcoran Prize Awards.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a member of the jury of prize awards at the Corcoran Gallery of Art (Society of Washington Artists Exhibit) both last year and this, I have discovered that the general public is ignorant of the way in which this jury functions. For all our sakes and reputations this should be made clear.

Upon arrival at the gallery, each member of the jury studies conscientiously the work displayed. Each writes his first, second and third choices on a slip of paper. Often the best work in any of the four classes (portrait, landscape, still life, sculpture) is Hors Concours, as "artists who have been awarded the medal in any class within five years are not eligible to compete in the same class in this exhibition."

It is seldom that every member of the jury is agreed. Sometimes a vote is nearly unanimous. Occasionally a choice wins by a majority, even when one or more members of the jury are violently opposed to the choice.

Jury members are human beings. All may be artists, but with widely differing tastes, training and traditions. The majority vote wins.

LOUISE KIDDER SPARROW.

The Fruits of War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A "retired" Army officer writes to The Post of January 17, under the title: "Are We Prepared for War?" Army officers never seem to be retired far enough to lose their mania for war! In 1914 Germany was very much prepared for war. She went into it, and judging from its aftermath she probably got enough of it and its results to last her for some time to come! Some of the results were, several millions slain, some millions of widows, some billions of property damage; the commerce of the world upset so far it has never recovered; the nations that engaged in the supreme folly verging upon bankruptcy; and the end is not yet!

Japan, after witnessing this world tragedy, got bloodthirsty, and went into Manchuria, and took possession, meanwhile losing the respect of some leading nations of the world. With this white elephant on her hands the retired Army officer thinks it possible that she might send a thousand airplanes over some of our principal cities, dropping bombs to destroy them. What would Japan gain by such a fool performance as that, if she became so war-mad as to try such a thing? Her isles are not self-supporting, and she can not afford to destroy the great flow of trade from the greatest country in the world! The Chinese may wake up some day, after receiving sufficient abuse, unite in one great host, and make the Yellow Sea run red with Japanese blood! There is no fear of any "Yellow Peril" over here, but Japan may know what it means some day.

We are in the greatest depression this country has ever experienced; one of many aftermaths of the war. Now let us think peace; talk peace, and work for peace, for how can real prosperity remain without it?

The Unemployment Problem.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: About one year ago I wrote for the press, both here and abroad, that if contractors were given cost plus or upset price contracts, the unemployed would be quickly absorbed in gainful occupation. What is delaying our Government project work? M. I. POLANSKY.

Another Letter From a Bald-Headed Dad to His Red-Headed Daughter

By Robert Quillen.

My dear Louise: There are girls, younger than you, so practical and level headed and keen that nobody can fool them. They can manage the household for mother or keep the store for dad. Nature and experience have made them "sharp as a briar."

And there are other girls, coldly selfish by nature and hardened by unhappy experience, who look on the world with suspicion and believe nothing at all.

You belong to neither class, and therefore my heart sinks when I think of the price you may pay for wisdom.

You believe too much. You have too much faith in people. You take decency too much for granted.

And people like that have fed the wolves for untold ages.

Trusting, simple, believing, unsuspicious people are the nicest ones and make the best friends, but they are the tricked and defrauded ones who are forever wailing: "I thought he was honest."

Their tale of woe is told in stock phrases as old as human gullibility: "He promised," or "He gave me his word," or "The man guaranteed," or "The man said."

It is always the same sad story of some simple soul, eager to believe a fairy story, stripped and humiliated and robbed by a plausible liar.

I wish I knew the words that would impress and warn you. In good, plain American, don't be a dumb sucker. Don't believe the things you wish to believe because they promise so much pleasure or happiness or profit.

Ask yourself always: "What can I lose and what can he gain if he is lying?"

Don't believe all you hear. People flatter you to be polite. They invite you casually without meaning it. They lie to win your confidence and use you in every way possible to advance themselves.

If the other fellow will gain and you will lose in case he is lying, believe nothing until you see the proof.

The world is full of people who think it smart to fool the simple. They don't hesitate to lie if a lie is necessary to "put it over."

Believe in your friends, but make the stranger prove it—and don't tempt your friends too far. The best of friends may nibble your stick of candy if you insist that he hold it. Love, DAD.

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

AS a face-saving device for Senator Nye, the announcement concerning the adjustment of differences between him and Crack-Down Johnson is not at all convincing; it is doubtful if it is to the Senator himself. As a matter of fact, I'll bet that after the announcement came out in the newspapers the senator eyed everybody he encountered very closely to see if they were laughing at him. Here is a striking illustration of an estimable young gentleman walking boldly up the hill and walking down again. The impression is, in fact, that he didn't hold his downward way to a walk, that instead he saw something at the top that frightened him into a trot and by the time he reached the bottom he was out of breath and hot and bothered.

BARGERON.

The wording of the announcement, of course, was ridiculous. The Senator, it said, was now satisfied about the NRA because it was going to set up a board to look after the small business man. Now if this satisfies the Senator he was very foolish to attack the NRA, to say anything disparaging about it in any way. Because the board had already been offered him, its formation was under way even as the Senator spoke

There is no need for any Senator to extend his lungs about the NRA if a board is all he wants. They have an unlimited supply of those things down there and if they happen not to have a particular one in stock they will send out and get it right away. In the matter of boards no agency could be more generous or accommodating. There is some thought, indeed, that if reemployment under the NRA was in proportion to the number of its boards, the depression would have been over weeks ago.

* * * *

No, it wasn't any board that the Senator wanted, and at heart he can't be satisfied now. He has only to read Crack-Down's speech of Thursday night at Worcester, Mass., to realize that a board won't answer his complaint. Crack-Down reflected his impatience toward the small business man then just as he has done many times before. For that matter, it is an impatience that runs throughout the New Deal philosophy.

No man has a right to go into business or to remain in it under this new philosophy, unless he can pay his employes what the New Deal prescribes. It would rather not have the businesses, being prepared to take care of these business men as well as his employes in the CWA. It is wonderful to have the money to get everything you want as this Administration has.

No board in the NRA is going to change that situation.

* * * *

What happened to Senator Nye, of course, is that Administration emissaries almost scared him to death. They told him, or rather passed around so they would get to him, stories of telegrams pouring into the White House condemning his stand, of a particular newspaper that had lost thousands and thousands of subscribers because it attacked the NRA.

They even put George Norris to work on him. I don't know how Norris approached his task, whether he repeated any of those stories to Nye or not. I don't think it was Crack-Down's hollering at Nye that frightened him so because he hollered back and seemed unruffled in doing it.

Apparently no effort has been made to frighten Borah. He doesn't frighten very easily. It is significant, too, that there has been no announcement of his being now satisfied with the NRA.

It may be, though, that when he gets through with his monetary work—he is quite interested in the so-called dollar devaluation bill—it will be necessary to try to appease him. Maybe they will get Hiram Johnson to work on him. The two are just like peas in a pod—like thunder they are.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Jeffery Farnol.

Romance is never dead. In the eighties Zola said that romantic novels would never again be taken seriously, that Walter Scott was a novelist only for school girls, that realism, experimentalism and naturalism had come to stay.

But even while Zola and other doctrinaires were handing down these decisions, Stevenson was writing "Treasure Island." Romance came back to delight the hearts of boys and girls, men and women. For there is a chronic hunger for romance. In the nineties the revival of romance was blooming everywhere; Sienkiewicz was writing historical stories of the great days of Poland and also "Quo Vadis;" in the late nineties came the greatest romantic drama of modern times, "Cyrano de Bergerac."

Not so very long after this, a new writer of sword-and-buckler, love and chivalry stories appeared. His name was Jeffery Farnol and he captured the English-reading world with "The Broad Highway." This will never become a classic like the works of Stevenson; but I am sure it still has many readers every year. Some years later he wrote "The Amateur Gentleman," a rather curious title, for could there be a professional gentleman? It is always interesting—at least for boys and men—to read about a good healthy scrap, especially with fists. The "Amateur Gentleman," I am sure, will charm almost any male reader today.

Interesting Play.

How some players reach the contracts they undertake will probably forever remain a mystery. However, as I have said before, some of the overambitious contracts afford opportunities for brilliant plays to fulfill them, which, if the hands had not been overbid, would be entirely unnecessary stratagems. The Bridge player who can find tricks where they apparently do not exist, and who, though apparently doomed to be set 2 tricks, even with every favorable break, succeeds in fulfilling his contract, has a worth-while achievement to his credit.

From Holland comes the story of the hand shown below. It is an extremely interesting example of accepting a desperate chance to fulfill a contract, made, it must be confessed, slightly more hopeful through the choice West made of an Opening lead.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♣	Pass	1♡	1♠
2♣	Pass	3◇	Pass
6♣	Pass	Pass	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Pass

The bidding, as I have said before, is atrocious. By no stretch of the imagination can South hope to dispose of his losers and fulfill a Small Slam contract, but that is beside the mark. East's Overcall furnished the one clew to the correct play of the hand by the Declarer.

Inasmuch as West was void of his partner's bid suit, he had a difficult choice of a lead and, as a matter of fact, he made the worst possible choice with his holding. Even the Opening of a low card from the King of diamonds would not have given South his contract, as time would then have run against the eventual establishment of the hearts. The same is also true of an Opening club lead.

West led the heart 7, and South ruffed and then led a diamond, taking the finesse immediately. Another heart was returned and ruffed, thus establishing one high heart in the Dummy. Next South led his last diamond, won with the Ace, and returned a diamond and ruffed. He could see a remote chance of making the contract, provided he could find a means of putting West in the lead with no cards but hearts left in his hand. When the diamond King fell, South knew that one part of his difficult problem had been fulfilled. Obviously, West now held only hearts and clubs—unless by chance he was false-carding in the diamond suit. If this were true, and East's play of the hearts indicated the distribution of the hand, then West had had six hearts originally, three diamonds and four clubs. What clubs there were, there was, of course, no way of knowing at the moment. The Declarer now laid down three high trumps, and then, instead of winning West's remaining trump, carefully used his own club to throw the lead to West in order that he might be forced to lead into Dummy's heart tenace at the end. In the meantime East also was squeezed and could not retain protection in spades and at the same time guard against the establishment of a diamond trick in the Dummy.

Thus played, South fulfilled his Small Slam contract which should not have been undertaken but which, it must be admitted, was masterfully executed.

Crusaders Misled World

Site of Mount of Beatitudes Was Long Hidden; the Platform of Kingdom Laid Down by Jesus Finds New Acceptance.

By William T. Ellis.

"Lawrence, of Arabia," came to his spectacular life work, he once told me, by studying the Crusades, and by following the routes and visiting the scenes of the activities of the Crusaders. Thus he landed in the East and developed that passion for it which all the world knows—an interest, by the way, as he has written me, which has now waned.

In the case of the present Lesson the Crusades explain why Kurn Hattin, on the western shore of the Lake of Galilee, is the traditional and accepted site of the Sermon on the Mount. The Crusaders settled upon Scriptural sites which lay within their own sphere of influence. Their sway did not at the time extend to the upper end of the lake, where, on a mountain slope looking down to the water, on the eastern side of the Jordan, near Bethsaida, the Sermon of Jesus was probably preached. Modern students of the land accept the latter site.

This is important for several reasons, the chief being that the world wants to know the location of this most momentous utterance since the giving of the law on Mount Sinai. The Sermon on the Mount is the platform of the Kingdom which Christ proclaimed. It is the charter of the new order of life toward which humanity is now actively struggling.

One Man—And Truth.

There is a timely sensationalness in this present study of the old utterances of Jesus. Some "smarties" think that the world has outgrown Christ: they haven't the wit to see how He is just now coming into His own. What are these broad-scale social revolutions all over the earth but a crude attempt to make practicable the standards set up by Jesus for the governance of life? NRA may fairly be interpreted as "Now Religion Applied." The changes inadequately called "the New Deal" had their real beginning nearly 2,000 years ago on a mountainside looking down upon the lovely waters of Galilee.

One Man's utterances (though He spoke with Divine authority) are changing the fashion of the race. Until very recently, our mood was one of exaltation of machinery and materialism. America thought she was great because she had the tallest sky-scrapers, the greatest number of automobiles, radios and bath tubs, and the most efficient machinery in the world. No sensible person thinks that way any longer. We yield the preeminence to ideas. A man speaking a truth is still the mightiest force beneath the starry vault. Our chastened spirits turn anew to listen to the Teacher from Nazareth, seated amidst the eager throngs on the Mount of Beatitudes.

"The Stately Steppings."

Suppose we pause and take a wide, long look at what Jesus was and did. Better than any summary I could make is this one by an anonymous writer:

"Here is a Man who was born in an obscure village, the Child of a peasant woman. He grew up in another village. He worked in a carpenter shop until He was 30, and then for three years He was an itinerant preacher. He never owned a home. He never had a family. He never went to college. He never traveled 200 miles from the place where He was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompany greatness. He had no credentials but Himself.

"While still a young man, the tide of public opinion turned against Him. His friends ran away. One of them denied Him. He was turned over to His enemies. He went through the mockery of a trial. He was nailed upon a cross between two thieves. His executioners gambled for the only piece of property He had on earth while He was dying, and that was His coat. When He was dead He was taken down and laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend.

"Nineteen wide centuries have come and gone and today He is the center of the human race and the leader of the column of progress. I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that ever were built, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned, put together, have not affected the life of man upon this earth as has that One Solitary Life."

Quoted as the core of this present study is that group of "radical" sayings of Jesus commonly called the Beatitudes. They are radical, because they go to the root of things. They mean more to mankind than any of the teachings of liberalism, socialism or communism. For they plow deep into the roots of human nature. So drastic are they that most "practical" men have always regarded them as sheer idealism. Now even they are beginning to wonder. Let us quote and then con these pregnant sentences:

"Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted.

"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled.

"Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy.

"Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.

"Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake.

"Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

In the Present Tense.

That shopworn religious word "blessed" has had its sharp edges worn off by long use. Perhaps "Happy" is the best synonym. The simple point to be grasped is that these magnificent propositions of Jesus are in the present tense, and they indicate that whoever accepts and practices them is already thereby "blessed" or "happy." One does not have to wait until the whole world has been changed in order to receive the benefits of the Beatitudes. The individual who dares to adopt these high principles for himself at once inherits felicity. He enters upon the Jesus manner of life.

Florence once formally elected Christ as its king. There is no need to wait for a majority vote to bring the radical teachings of Jesus into operation. As, one by one, man after man accepts these standards as his own rule of private life, the sway of the Kingdom grows. We can enter upon an ideal collectivism only by the growth of inspired individualism. Wherever the Sermon on the Mount is practiced, there the Kingdom comes.

At first glance, the Beatitudes seem to offer a sort of "Alice-In-Wonderland," upside down kind of life. Yet a little thought makes clear that a man's spiritual standards and state are all that really count. Life, in reality, is not a material but a spiritual thing. One's own soul matters more than all that happens outside of him. Moreover, the direct result of rightness of soul is the transformation of outward conditions. All that the world is so feverishly seeking today follows after the acceptance of Christ's kingdom law by individual men and women.

Red Cross Chairman Honored on Birthday

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Graves Mather entertained at a large dinner at the Sulgrave Club in honor of Judge John Barton Payne in celebration of his seventy-ninth birthday anniversary.

Judge Payne, who has been chairman of the American Red Cross since 1921, is one of the well-loved members of Washington society. Born in Pruntytown, Virginia, now West Virginia, in 1855, Judge Payne first came to Washington, officially, in 1917, when he was general counsel for the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, and later became chairman of the Shipping Board. He served as Secretary of the Interior in the second Administration of President Wilson, and was appointed chairman of the Red Cross by President Harding.

The celebration last evening was informal. The guests included close friends of Judge Payne. After dinner the members of the party offered a short divertissement written by Mrs. John Coit Bloodgood, one of the guests, in honor of Judge Payne.

The guests included Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Senator Frederic C. Wolcott, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark L. Bristol, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Charles L. Hussey, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service and Mrs. Hugh S. Cumming, the former United States Ambassador to Spain and Mrs. Irwin B. Laughlin, Bishop James E. Freeman, Col. and Mrs. John Bigelow, Dr. and Mrs. John Coit Bloodgood, Dr. and Mrs. Frank J. Mather, jr., of Princeton, N. J.; Mr. Charles Henry Butler, Mr. Lynch Luquer, Miss Alice Tweedy, Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, Miss Dorothy Sollers, Miss Mabel Boardman, Miss Bell Gurnee, Miss Alice Wilkins, Mr. Richard Flournoy, and Mr. and Mrs. W. France Awards Honor Emblem To Mrs. Lewis

The Ambassador of France, M. Andre de Laboulaye, presented the Cross of the Chevalier of the Legion of Honor to Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, wife of Senator Lewis, of Illinois, Thursday. The ceremony took place in the Embassy.

In Paris, just after the World War, Mrs. Lewis was decorated with the French Hospital War Medal of Honor of des Eperdime and also the French medal of La Reconnaissance Francaise with star, in appreciation by the French government, of her war work under the French war office in the hospital department in France.

For many years Mrs. Lewis, who is descended from a long line of titled French ancestry, her forefathers being members of the first Huguenot colony to settle in South Carolina after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, has interested herself greatly in all activities relating to France, having been a member of the executive committee of the Alliance Francaise and later president of the Council of Administration of the Chicago Alliance Francaise. She is a member of the American library committee for the Strasbourg University, and has founded French study classes in several cities and has delivered French talks before many Franco-American societies.

Mrs. Lewis was the first president in Paris of the Franco-American charity Les Petites Puelbot, founded by Count Jean de Piessac for the benefit of helpless waifs of Paris.

Among those attending the embassy ceremony were Mrs. Hugh Campbell Wallace, wife of the late American Ambassador to France; Miss Mary Patten, Judge John Barton Payne and Mrs. Adolph Casper Miller.

Former Capital Residents Wed In Hollywood

Announcement of the marriage of Miss Thelma V. England and Mr. David Lynn, both former residents of Washington, in Hollywood, Calif., on January 6, has been received here.

The ceremony was performed at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Hollywood. The bride wore a turquoise blue spring suit trimmed in fox, with corsage of sweetheart roses and lilies of the valley. She was attended by Mrs. Ena Berryman as matron of honor. Mr. John Russell Berryman, formerly of Washington, was best man. A large company was present.

Following the ceremony, the couple were guests of Mrs. Ann Merrill, of Los Angeles, at a wedding breakfast, after which they departed by plane for Agua Caliente for a short wedding trip. They are now at home in the Hollywood Argyle Apartments, 2017 North Argyle avenue, Los Angeles.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William G. England, of Washington. She attended Eastern High School and private schools in Washington.

Mr. Lynn is a nephew of David Lynn, Washington architect. A graduate of the National Law School, he left Washington in 1930 to practice law in St. Louis, removing to Los Angeles last year.

Maj. and Mrs. A. D. Surles had as their guests at the ride Col. Waite, deputy administrator of the Public Works Administration, and Mrs. Waite; Maj. and Mrs. Philip Fleming, Maj. and Mrs. Howell Estes, Maj. and Mrs. John Lucas and Maj. and Mrs. John Davis.

Following the drill there was a tea dance at the Administration Building, which was decorated with regimental flags.

Clock Turned Back to 1898 At Vienna Ball

Capital Hostesses Revive Gay Social Era in Costume Party.

One of the most original dances of the season was given Thursday evening by Miss Helen Lee Washington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Lee Washington; Miss Rosalind Wright and Miss Barbara Wright, daughters of Mrs. Hamilton Wright, in the Wright home, on Massachusetts avenue.

The invitations to the small group of guests were disguised as invitations to a ball in Vienna, 1898. Envelopes were addressed to the guests in their own names, but the inclosed invitations were addressed to members of Vienna society of the days of 1898. Many of the young diplomats now in Washington found themselves addressed as famous people who contributed to the gayety of the Austrian capital during the last years of the nineteenth century.

Many of the ladies wore costumes which would have done justice to a grand embassy ball, while the men confined their transformation to flowing moustaches and sideburns, and several wore beards. The evening was gay and the Viennese waltzes outnumbered the ordinary run of fox trots and tangos.

Woman Heads Movement for Decent Housing

A window for every room,
A bathroom for every home,
A space of ground around every home.

Writers, architects, and painters have long advocated that every artist has an inalienable right to privacy. Virginia Woolf, author, declares that every woman should have a room of her own. Gordon Craig, stage designer, goes her one better by advocating that each person have a house to himself.

Mr. Craig's idea strikes most persons as carrying things a bit far, but the Woolf theory has been heartily indorsed by the National Public Housing Conference, in session today at the Willard Hotel. This group, headed by Mrs. Mary K. Simkhovitch, is busy on plans whereby families with low incomes will be able to live in attractive, sanitary, comfortable homes.

These new houses will be built with the help of the National recovery act.

"Under the NRA it is possible for public bodies, such as cities or municipal housing authorities, to obtain grants from the Public Works Administration," explained Mrs. Simkhovitch yesterday in her room at the Willard. "These grants provide funds to pay for 30 per cent of the cost of building materials and labor.

"Several cities, including Detroit and Los Angeles, have already taken advantage of these grants. Other cities are planning to do the same. The building of workers' homes in Washington is to be carried on by private interests, I believe.

"It certainly is time that the United States should do something about the homes of the low-income class. England has built more than 2,000,000 houses for her working men since the war. Germany is not far behind. But in this country persons will small salaries are still existing in dark, insanitary, overcrowded rooms.

Pitiable Conditions.

"In one city we found that an entire block of flats was dependent upon one outside faucet for the water supply. A community bathtub is fairly common among these people; that is, if they have access to a bathtub at all. Many run-down houses and flats have no clothes closets, so that the people have to hang their garments on the bedposts or suspend them from a rickety chandelier."

"The houses we are planning to build, wherever grants from the PWA may be obtained," said Mrs. Simkhouvitch, "will have clothes closets, outdoor play space for children and large rooms that let in sunlight and clean air. Each dwelling will cover only half of the lot upon which it is built, so that there will be room for vegetable patches and for a bit of lawn. Each house will have a bathroom and each person will have a room, as a rule. Of course the latter won't always be practicable. When there are nine children in a family it isn't like'y that we can give them an eleven-room house. But, for the average family, we hope to provide a room for each person.

Rebuilding Old Sections.

"Not all the conveniences will be within the home," added the president of the National Public Housing Conference. "We plan to build groups of houses as close to the men's work as possible. We don't want to start settlements far out in the suburbs so that the laborers will have to spend an hour or so getting to and from work. We hope to arrange neighborhood units that are within short distances of laundries, grocery stores, drug stores and other service mediums. These units will be located near schools and churches, which, in many cases, will mean rebuilding an old section of the city instead of establishing a new section.

"It's really a shame that houses aren't like apples and pears," sighed Mrs. Simkhovitch. "Then, after so long a time, they would rot and disappear. Instead, they keep on cluttering up the cities long after they are fit to be lived in and long after they have paid for themselves. Where it is feasible, these ramshackle affairs will be razed and attractive new houses will be erected in their place.

"Can't you just see what these new homes will mean to people who have been herded in a few gloomy rooms without any of the modern conveniences and with precious little comfort? Children who have had to play on crowded sidewalks will romp on grassy lawns. Women who have tried to minister to their families under great difficulties will have running water, electricity, airy rooms and, if they wish, their own little gardens.

"Please understand this," said Mrs. Simkhovitch, "we're not planning to go in for extravagances. But we are planning to give people with low incomes homes in which they will be able to keep clean and healthy.

"And if we can manage to include a little beauty with sanitation and comfort, I don't think anybody will object."

Ancient Metal Hoard Is Shown in New York

Gregoire Samsonoff, secretary and legal adviser to the duchess, arrived in December with the collection. The pieces, known as the treasures of Carniola, were unearthed under the personal direction of the duchess in what is now Yugoslavia.

I Ask You to Forget.

By Katherine Smith.

I once ran fingers through the riotous hair
Of youthful love, caught perfumes drifting through Warm atmosphere, I once plucked all the blue
Forget-me-nots and wove my garlands where
The sun was brighest. Too, I let my feet
Walk wearily beside old anguish, lamed
And stumbling with doubt; and I have named
Myself companion to a trust, complete
And beautiful. Take back them, all the bright
And bitter wailings of my youngest dream,
Take too, the tarnish on my oldest gleam
Of joy, and when you take these things tonight,
Remember me as dust that used to blow—
A sleeper buried in eternal snow.

'National Youth' Feeling Moves German People

Mrs. Keyes, Recently Back, Interprets Spirit Now Actuating Them.

Germany is now a young country—a country made young by the feeling of awakened vitality now surging through the nation.

That is the impression brought back by Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, who has just returned from several months of travel in Germnay. Mrs. Keyes gave a lecture, "An American Woman in Germany," last night under the auspices of the National Geographic Society. Preceding the lecture she talked informally of her impressions of the nation whose political and social life have been revolutionized by Adolf Hitler.

"Now Greater Country."

"Germany is indeed a different country under the new regime," Mrs. Keyes said, "but it is a greater country. There seems to be a feeling of greater unity among the people. For the first time in many years they feel that they are united as a nation.

"There is a feeling of awakened youth which causes one to feel that the country is on the way to a period of revival and growth. The change in attitude is positively electrical.

"Nowhere did I find any antagonism toward the people of other nations. On the contrary, the attitude of everyone I met was most cordial and friendly. And I found that true not only of official but of people in all stations of life.

"There was one incident which especially touched me. It is the custom when taking long journeys by train there to hire a pillow. And the price is very small—one mark. On a long trip I hired a pillow just as the train was pulling out of the station. I hastily handed the boy a small coin, and thought nothing of it. Ten hours later when we stopped in a small town I noticed a steward who was carrying a telegram and anxiously looking into each compartment.

Small Boy's Honesty.

"When he saw me his face lighted up and he asked, 'Did you hire a pillow when you left Cologne?' I replied that I had. He then reached in his pocket and handed me a mark. 'The boy you hired the pillow from wired me to give you this,' he said. 'The train left before he had time to give you your change.'"

"That one little incident shows much of the attitude of the German people, rather than have me feel that I had been cheated he spent more money than he made trying to return the extra change. And that boy had no idea who I was. To him I was just a tourist."

Mrs. Keyes said that the two persons who impressed her most while she was in Germany were the burgomaster, Mr. Krogman, and Dr. Schacht, the president of the Reichsbank.

"Mr. Krogman has a charm which recalls the gentlemen of medieval times," she explained. "And Dr. Schacht impressed me by his dignity and his courtesy.

"In Honor We Are Lords."

"I hope that my lecture will help cause a better understanding between the American and German people," Mrs. Keyes concluded, "for the Germans are wonderful people and their friendship is valuable. There is a little inscription above the list of soldiers killed in the war in the Reichsbank which expresses the German people as I know them. It says:

"'Victory or defeat lies in God's hands. Of honor we ourselves are lords and masters.'"

A large audience attended Mrs. Keys' lecture, which was illustrated with moving pictures. Mrs. Keyes is one of the few women who have appeared before the National Geographic Society as speakers. Others have included Amelia Earhart, Mrs. Martin Johnson and Mrs. Harriet Chalmers Adams.

Plans Real Homes for Workingmen

Gallows of Chance

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

The Story Thus Far.

Only one man can save Cecil Brandt from the gallows. He is Sir Humphrey Rossiter, youthful home secretary of England, who refuses to grant a reprieve. Brandt is to be hanged at 8 o'clock the following morning. Sir Humphrey, returning to London by automobile after a visit in the country, is abducted by a gang of masked men. The leader tells him he will be hanged unless he agrees to spare Brandt. Firm in his refusal to intervene, Sir Humphrey is about to be put to death when a messenger arrives with word that Brandt's wife, a famous actress and friend of the home secretary, is waiting at Rossiter's London residence, eager to tell the truth about the slaying of Gervase Benham.

The mysterious band frees Sir Humphrey who speeds to London. There he finds Mrs. Brandt who tells him that Benham was shot in her bedroom, which he had entered to discuss their new play. Finding his suspicions unfounded, Brandt ordered her to preserve silence and carried Benham's body into the study. This casts a different light on the shooting and Sir Humphrey agrees to grant a reprieve. She departs and the home secretary lifts his telephone to call Wandsworth Prison. He collapses in a deep faint. Hours later, when he revives, he learns that Brandt had been hanged.

He visits Mrs. Brandt weeks later and she tells him she believed her husband was insane and did not want to live. Later Sir Humphrey calls on Scotland Yard to run down the gang of masked abductors. Gen. Sir Harold Moore, chief commissioner, details his best men to find the band.

Parkins came quietly into the room, followed by a second man carrying a silver tray. He handled the shaker in vigorous fashion, poured out two foaming cocktails, which he offered to Lady Louise and Sir Humphrey, and left the shaker upon the small table.

"Anything important during the day?" the latter inquired.

"Mr. Carthew has dealt with everything, sir," Parkins reported. "He is engaged at present finishing some letters, but he would like a word with you before he leaves."

"What a blessing a good secretary is," Sir Humphrey remarked, as he raised his glass.

"I think I should like to be your secretary," Lady Louise confided. "I'm tired of doing nothing."

He smiled.

"I've read the newspapers oftener than usual up to the last few days," he said. "Doing nothing rather amuses me! Pictures of Lady Louise Keynsham at the hunt, in the Holcombe shooting party, at the gala performance of the opera, flying from Le Bourget en route to Cannes, playing golf at Mandelieu—"

"A rubbishy sort of life," she interrupted. "Edward is the person I envy. He never seems to have a moment to spare, and look what a success he makes of his career."

"I take off my hat to him," Sir Humphrey agreed. "Other men have made great fortunes, of course, but it is not often you find any one brought up like Edward who can go straight into what they tell me was almost a declining business, and make such a huge success of it. Did you say he was calling for you this evening?"

She nodded.

Admires Her Beauty.

"We arrived here together about an hour ago," she explained. "When he found you would not be back until 6 o'clock, he took the car and went off to pay some visits. He may be back at any moment now to call for me. Do you mind if I smoke? Don't get up. I like my own, please, and I have a briquet."

Sir Humphrey looked lazily across at her, full of content and appreciation of the perfect picture she made, with her slender body almost voluptuously relaxed, her fearlessly displayed legs delicately clad in silk and the patent shoes so well cut to display her arched instep.

"You are terribly good looking, Louise," he said. "No wonder you are so much the vogue. I look down the second column of the Times every day expecting to see that 'a marriage has been arranged,' &c."

"Do you want me to get married?" she asked.

"I should have a perfectly unreasonable and dog-in-the-mangerish hatred of your fiance," he confessed, with a sudden disturbing reflection that the speech which he had started lightly enough was the sober truth.

She smiled as though gratified. Her lips, as they parted, became fuller and more vivid curves of scarlet. Her smile seemed to be coming also from her deeply shaded eyes.

"You lovable person," she murmured.

Keynsham Arrives.

"Lord Edward Keynsham," he announced.

Keynsham crossed the floor with extended hands, the vigorous and boyish personification of splendid manhood. He had been paying formal calls, and his town clothes showed off to the fullest advantage his fine muscular figure. He came up to Sir Humphrey with outstretched hands and a delightful smile upon his face.

"Humphrey, old man, this is wonderful," he exclaimed. "Don't move. I forbid it! I will bring this chair up. What's that I see—a cocktail shaker? Parkins," he added, looking round, "you're going to bring me a glass, aren't you? We must drink to your master's recovery."

"If your lordship will allow me, I will replenish the shaker," Parkins said respectfully. "This has been here some few minutes."

It was an easy and pleasant little trio, composed of people who evidently liked one another. Keynsham seemed almost as delighted as his sister to welcome Rossiter back. He gossiped and told news of their mutual friends until the replenished cocktail shaker arrived, then he drank to his host's renewed health and with his hand upon his shoulder, a thrill of earnestness in his tone.

Worried Over Health.

"I can not tell you, Humphrey," he said, "how we all felt about your being taken ill like that directly you had left us. Do set my mind at rest—I didn't give you too much to do that last day, did I? You would walk that outside drive, you know. I told you the Lindsay boy would do it."

"I was only pleasantly tired," was the emphatic reply. "It was not that—as I was telling Louise. I was pretty well run down before I came. I ought really to have lain on my back for two or three days. And then—"

"Yes?" Keynsham asked.

Sir Humphrey did not finish his sentence.

"By the bye," he inquired, "I was going to ask you something. Just a question about that car your people hired for me. Do you know where they got it from?"

Keynsham puckered his brows for a moment in thought.

"Well, I can't exactly say," he admitted. "Grover generally rings up his friend at Fakenham and then if they haven't anything they send to Norwich. There wasn't anything wrong with it, was there? You didn't have a breakdown or anything of that sort?"

"No, there was no breakdown. We got to London all right. Still, I should like to know where the car came from. Perhaps later on we may talk about it."

"You're making me curious," Lord Edward confessed.

A Little Incident.

"Well, there was a little incident," Rossiter confided. "It is nothing; I'm not going to talk about at the moment, but you may hear of it again."

"I will find out for you," Louise promised. "I'm going down to Norfolk tomorrow for a few days, and I will ask Grover."

"Good girl," her brother said, lighting a cigarette from the box which his host had pushed toward him. "I have no memory for that sort of thing. I shall always think it was the greatest pity in the world, Humphrey, that you hurried away. No miracle happened, you see, after all. That poor fellow Brandt was for it."

Sir Humphrey drained the contents of his glass.

"Yes," he agreed, "Brandt was hanged."

"I wonder, have you seen Katherine since?" Keynsham inquired. "I hope it's not an impertinent question. One simply does not know what to do about it."

"Yes, I have seen her," Sir Humphrey admitted. "Of course, it has been a terrible blow, but she's facing the situation."

Louise blew out a little cloud of smoke.

Invited to Pay Visit.

"Why do you talk about that terrible subject?" she protested. "Edward, do try and get Humphrey to promise to come and spend Easter with us. I know it's dreary enough at this time of the year, but spring in some of the sheltered parts of Keynsham is wonderful, Humphrey. You shall pick the first violets from our hedges on the south side of the park and you will never want to look at these conservatory grown ones I brought you today."

"I'll come—if I can get away," Sir Humphrey promised.

Louise glanced at the clock and reluctantly rose to her feet.

"I will even promise you," Keynsham said, as he folowed his sister's example and shook his host warmly by the hand, "that if you don't bring a tar down I will send you up in my own special Royale."

"You shall have a choice of that," Louise intervened, "or my Parton."

"I have a great weakness," Sir Humphrey confessed as he thrilled with the caress of Louise's fingers, "for riding in a Parton."

Chapter VI.

At five minutes to 8 precisely on the following Sunday evening, the Right Hon. Sir Humphrey Rossiter descended the elegant curving stairway of the house in Chestow Square and entered the dining room. He glanced with satisfaction at the small round-table with its chaste appointments and tasteful arrangement of flowers. He looked through the menu, then put it down with an almost self-conscious smile as he realized how many of her favorite dishes he had remembered. He poked the fire, which was very little in need of such attention, and made his way into the library adjoining.

As he passed across the hall 8 o'clock struck. He consulted his watch. Exactly right. At any moment now he would hear the car stop outside. Katherine had always been noted for her punctuality. He took up a Sunday paper and threw it down again. Scarcely worth while reading. He heard the hoot of a taxi outside and listened expectantly, but the taxi passed on. He pulled out his cigarette case and toyed with it for a moment, then he remembered the doctor's orders, and with a wry face replaced it.

Five minutes past 8. She would be here directly now. She would be wearing black, of course. He liked her best in black. Nothing showed off so beautifully her deep golden hair. Poor woman, what a tragedy her marriage had been, how heartrending the whole affair. There had been a time, he reminded himself, standing on the hearth rug and looking up at the Adam ceiling, when he had wondered whether it would have been possible for him, without sacrificing his career, to help her to forget.

Girl Hitch Hiker Tells of Journeys

Says She Has Covered Wide Area in U. S.

Springfield, Mass., Jan. 26 (AP).—Miss Ethel Walker, 19, who gave her address as Baltimore, Md., is under arrest here today after what she says was a hitch-hiking adventure of several weeks.

She told police that she had traveled over a wide part of the country, mostly on trucks. She was arrested here as she alighted from a truck, and was held on a technical charge of vagrancy while police check up on her story.

She told police that in her travels she had found a large number of thrill-seeking girls traveling around the country via the hitch-hike route, most of them dressed as boys.

Gallic Tradition Forbids That, Youthful Mme. de Laboulaye Says

Holds Custom Has Operated Against Those Affected by War; Women Do Not Even Vote There, "But May Influence Husbands;" Home and Family All.

What do women of other lands think of American women, with their enterprise, their versatility, their combination of family life and careers? In France, at least, they find us admirable; an example to be emulated.

Today's interview with the wife of the Ambassador of France is the sixth in a series with women of the diplomatic corps in Washington.

By Elizabeth Young.

If the prejudice, deeply rooted in France, against careers for women could be overcome, life would become much easier for those whose condition was affected by the war.

She marvels at the spectacle of American women of finest background and breeding, taking active part in the political and professional life of the United States, she told The Post woman's page representative.

"In France," she said, "women stay more at home. There they may engage in sewing or the manual arts, but they may not participate in public activity. Nor do our women vote. Of course," she smiled, "the French husband seldom votes without first asking his wife how he has got to do it. He might not like to say so, but it's true."

Despite the fact that she is the mother of grown children, and her statement that she did not marry young, Mme. de Laboulaye is buoyantly youthful. She had crossed the threshold with the swiftness of a girl, hand outstretched to greet her interviewer. Her hair was fluffed in a soft bang, and she wore a jacket frock of wine red crepe.

Rigid French Customs.

Perching lightly on the edge of a formal green-and-silver divan, with hands folded in her lap, she expressed the wish that she may live to go back to her own country young and strong enough to work out a way of opening the door of opportunity for careers to young French girls of good family.

To embark on a career today still means that young girls of fine family in France must forego social acceptance, she explained. She hopes that she may be able to provide her own daughters with at least the possibility of a career should they choose to depart from the traditional French idea of home life for women.

Her 13-year-old daughter, Agnes, has already demonstrated great interest in nursery and kindergarten work, and is forever insisting on mothering children younger than herself. Her mother is quite willing that she should develop the interest in a practical way as she grows up.

Lauds U. S. Welfare Work.

Marie-Therese, who is 18, and a student at Trinity College, has shown a marked predilection for study, and should she one day become a teacher—as now seems likely—her mother would thoroughly approve.

In her own girlhood, Mme. de Laboulaye was tremendously interested in intellectual pursuits. Denied the opportunity for travel until after marriage, she spent much time in supervising the recreation and study hours of children of working mothers in Paris—the only form of social or welfare work open to French girls in her day.

Mme. de Laboulaye believes America leads the world in the field of organized welfare and charitable work. The knowledge she has acquired through active participation in such work in Washington she hopes to pass on to her own countrywomen on her return to France.

Humanitarian Variance.

"Our work for the less privileged classes is not so well organized as yours in America," she said. "We don't raise money so well. Assistance is given individually, rather than generally, as is done here. I think America's way is better."

While admitting humanitarian interests, Mme. de Laboulaye confessed that her family is the orbit of her existence.

"My family: my husband, my four children, are my whole life," she said. "Everything, for me, is le foyer—the home. I am nothing out of the home. Besides my daughters, I have two sons."

They are Paul, who is past 20; and Francois, who is now 16. Francois and Marie-Therese were born in America. The Laboulayes were first stationed here 21 years ago, and came again 10 years later for an 18 months' stay.

Wanted Mate Who Worked.

Altogther they have spent eight years in America, and they feel as much at home in Washington as in their native Paris, or Normandie, where they used to spend their summers. All of them love Washington.

"Do I like being an ambassador's wife? Well, I had always planned to marry a man who worked," she laughed. "It made no difference to me where his work might take us. Yet I never dreamed of being an ambassador's wife. I had thought, possibly, of something simpler; something not so elaborate. When we married, I'm sure neither of us dreamed my husband would become an ambassador. It came about through our American friends.

"It's an interesting life. It takes a lot of time, of course, and then one never knows if one has done everything right." Her tone was light. "It means certain sacrifices in leaving old friends, breaking the home ties of one's youth.

Benefits to Children.

"Yes, I think the children of diplomats profit by their changing environment. They have opportunity for a larger culture. They cannot be narrow minded. They learn through contact with children of other countries that people the world over are much the same as themselves. It's very good for them, on the whole."

Mme. de Laboulaye believes America may benefit through repeal of prohibition.

Embassy Aids Children Who Need Clothing

Ladies Sew Garb for Those Insufficiently Clad for School.

Two wistful little faces peered out of a window at the school children hurrying by, books and lunches tucked under their arms.

"Can't we ever go to school again, mama?" the oldest of the two little girls asked.

"Of course you can!" the mother answered, with a brave attempt to sound cheerful. "Just wait; you'll have some new dresses some day."

The faith and courage of this mother have been rewarded. Little faces that sadly peered from windows are aglow with smiles. And little feet are tripping to school again.

Mme. de Laboulaye, wife of the French Ambassador, heard of the plight of a great many Washington school children, who were forced to stay at home because they had no clothes to wear, and their parents could not afford to buy them.

The gracious Frenchwoman, who is a mother herself, talked things over with the other ladies of the French Embassy. For days there was much snipping of scissors and threading of needles. And then one day it all stopped. There, arranged in a neat pile, were more than 40 dresses, made from gay, colorful prints; dresses which would delight any little girl in the world.

These were given to the District of Columbia Chapter of the American Red Cross and thence distributed to the Parent-Teacher Association, to be used for children who have been kept out of school for lack of proper clothing.

Other articles for layettes, knitted jackets and bootees were sent by the Red Cross to the Visiting Nurse Association to be used in emergency cases.

Bake Shop Boss' Wife Tells Him Foods of Appeal

So He Creates Baked Ham Special for Today; Stuffed Celery Not Difficult.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

The trials and tribulations of housewives generally center around the dining-room table. The problem of finding something to serve which will appeal to the entire family looms as perplexing as the most involved algebraic equation. The proprietor of a local bake shop says he's learned from his wife that if he wants to sell his products he must find things which make direct appeal to the housewife, and which help her solve the dinner question.

Today he is featuring an old-fashioned Virginia baked ham prepared after the Virginia manner. First it was boiled until quite well done, then covered with brown sugar, and soaked in molasses. Last it was garnished with cloves and baked. The result is highly delightful, flavory and savory.

These hams, selling for 98 cents, weigh between 4 and 5 pounds. They may be reheated and served for dinner, and the remains kept over for a cold plate, or for use in sandwiches.

Stuffed celery is always a tempting appetizer to serve with dinner, but a great many hostesses feel that the effort it takes to prepare it is too great. The task, however, becomes almost negligible if a tube of cheese is used. This is arranged so that the light creamy roquefort may be easily squeezed out into the celery. The cheese paste is good for many other things besides. It may always be used to "top off" a salad, to "touch up" a sandwich, or to garnish hors d'oeuvres.

But there's anchovy paste, too, which comes in a small package for the very excellent reason that it only takes a minute quantity to give a large amount of taste. This is highly concentrated and richly flavored.

Somewhat less common than anchovy paste is that made from ground and seasoned shrimps. Connoisseurs of unusual delicacies say that for an appetizer and real tempter either crackers or bread spread with shrimp paste is hard to beat.

Let's have our iron today in pickled form. A local food shop has some raisins now changed into pickles by a special process which both brings out the taste and adds flavor.

These are attractive and novel to spring on an unsuspecting family, or with which to surprise dinner, luncheon, or tea guests. They may be served by themselves, or with dinner. They're delightful for garnishing a salad plate.

Hot cakes and syrup are always welcome for breakfast. Even in themselves they offer an untold variety. The cakes may be flour or wheat, and made from one of many recipes. The syrup may be thick molasses, medium, or thin, light syrup.

One downtown store is featuring some apple syrup. It is one of the best breakfast sweets on the market and has a positive affinity for hot cakes.

Breads which are characteristic of foreign countries are delicious novelties to serve at any time. The ordinary meal can grow remarkably stale unless the housewife makes an effort to liven it up by introducing unusual dishes. A great many times she can't do this and still look the budget in the eye. In such a case she can well turn to breads, for they offer novelty and at the same time are delightfully inexpensive.

A downtown shop is running a "special" on Danish pastry ring today. This comes in a large, delicious-looking circle, richly embellished with almond filling. A simple breakfast of this Danish bread, and either hot chocolate or coffee, preceded, of course, by fruit juice, both are easy to prepare and appetizing.

A Connecticut avenue delicatessen has some black Russian bread. This is delicious served with cheeses or any rich pastes.

A fancy box of fancy cup cakes is selling today for 25 cents. And there are nine cakes in the box! Each one has its particular kind of icing, so that together the nine look like a lovely cake bouquet.

They were made in a shop where particular attention is given to each viand before it is put up for sale. As a result, any housewife can buy anything here with utter confidence.

It only takes a minute to make hot chocolate if we do it the modern way. Cellophane packages containing all the necessary ingredients make delicious hot chocolate when poured into a cup of hot water and thoroughly mixed.

A food store sells these packs, four for a dime.

Heated over roasts are all very well if careful attention is given to redlavoring them. Some women use bits of garlic for the second cooking, others onions or tomatoes. Ordinary garlic gloves do give a delightful flavor, but one which stays and stays. A well-known food store has some garlic sauce which may be used quite freely and is guaranteed to leave no "after taste."

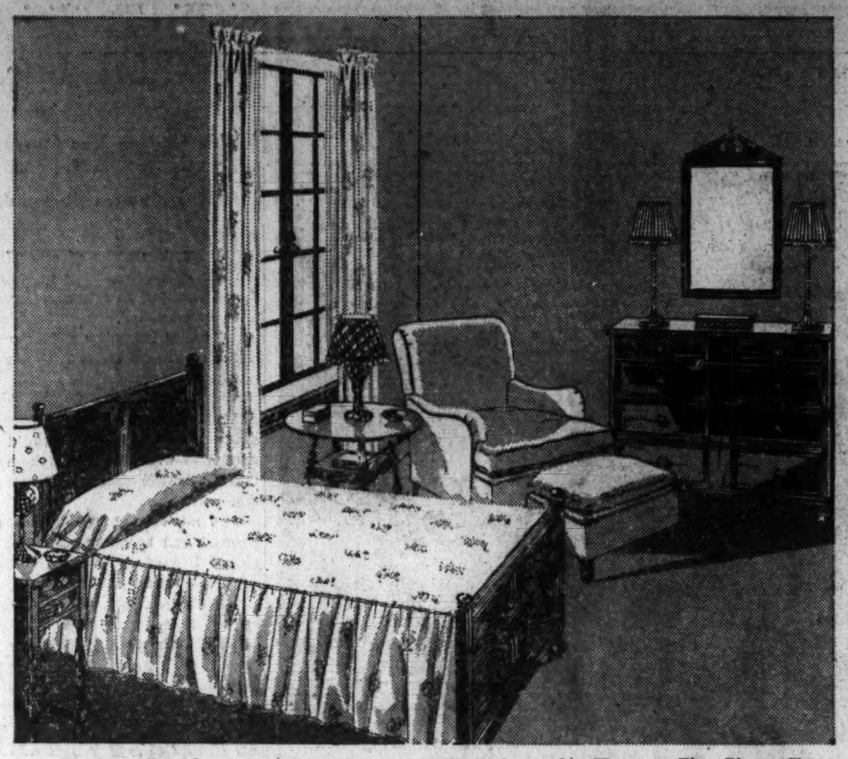
Sturdy Oak and Maple Are Undisputed Favorites In Selection of "He-Man's" Bedroom Furniture



By Amos Parrish

New York, Jan. 26.—Give a man a free hand in choosing the furniture for his own bedroom and it's even chances he'll come home with the sales check for a suite of sturdy Jacobean oak type. And he'll tell you about the rich dark brown of the wood, the heavy carving and massive lines which distinguish this most masculine looking of all furniture.

Leave it to a woman to furnish the man's bedroom and he'll almost always sleep in maple. Like it, too, if he hasn't been shopping by himself and made the discovery of oak.

For maple in solid, sturdy looking furniture is also masculine looking. (It's a maple room we've had sketched.)

Of course any furniture which has a sturdy build and simple lines which lean toward severity is in keeping with a male atmosphere. It just happens that the simplest and sturdiest is usually made in one of these two woods.

Draperies and Wall Treatments.

With the mellow, rich, golden brown tones of maple, chintzes in rich colors, heavy homespun materials and even damasks in deep red and gold are the fabrics to use in a man's bedroom. Dark brown rugs and tan walls would complete the color harmony in a way which any man would appreciate.

With oak furniture the most appropriate drapery materials are heavy hand-blocked linen in dark colors on a tan ground. Damasks are adaptable, too, in red, rose or blue, and in case damask is used, a bedspread of the same material would make an excellent ensemble.

Oriental Rug Helps.

Oak furniture lives very happily in rich surroundings and for a rug nothing would be more appropriate than an Oriental in deep reds or dark blues.

This oak furniture comes down from that period in England right after Queen Elizabeth . . . a period of big, hearty men and rooms and furniture of massive proportions.

For modern use it has been scaled down to fit our smaller modern rooms. But its proportions remain the same, its shapes are characteristic of 300 years ago, and the carvings and bulbous excrescences are quite faithfully adhered to.

Three or Five Pieces Chosen.

Maple bedroom suites come in a great variety of designs and there are a number of pieces made for each one, from which either three or five are generally chosen. This allows considerable expression of personal choice and many individual and artistic effects can be gained.

Important for the man's room if five pieces are to be used are a simple single or ¾ size bed, a good-size dresser wih mirror above, a highboy, two tables . . . one of which goes beside the bed.

The second table is to be placed beside the comfortable chair and ottoman which he will certainly want but which are not included in the bedroom suite. These, of course, should be upholstered in a material to go with the curtains and bedspread.

In the illustration three pieces of a suite are shown—bed, chest and dresser. Then a small night stand has been placed by the bed, a lounge chair and ottoman near the window and a lamp table next to this.

Clever Cooks Find Tasty Mixed Grill Plate Is Direct Highway to Man's Heart; Here's How

Few men outgrow the little-boy delight of seeing a number of foods—well-chosen, well-cooked and arranged in good taste all on one dish. That's why many restaurants that cater to men feature a mixed grill—it's main attraction a juicy, broiled lamb chop (that favorite meat of former Ambassador Andrew Mellon, automobile man William C. Durant, and many others).

Alongside that chop, like as not, there's a broiled lamb kidney, 2 strips of broiled bacon or 2 broiled sausages (or both), a couple of broiled mushroom caps, and a half tomato broiled. French fried potatoes, too, or (on a separate dish so as not to crowd plate) a big, mealy baked Idaho potato. Additional vegetables there may be—such as string beans, peas, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts or eggplant. These will be dressed just with butter. Then for a dish of pickles somewhere in the offing, or a mixed green salad with French dressing.

Hows and Whys.

Although these popular combinations are called grills (in some restaurants they are cooked on a grill over charcoal or hard coal) in most cases they are broiled. Doing them at home, I think you'll find it best to cook just the meats in the broiler, and do the tomatoes and mushrooms in a heavy frypan on top of the stove. This way you won't overcrowd the broiler, and can get all the foods done at about the same time. If you like the flavor of bacon especially well, cook the bacon first, and use the drippings to baste the other meats. Otherwise use butter for basting.

Split the lamb kidney and dip it in French dressing or melted butter before broiling. (Or use veal kidney, treating it the same way, but serving only half of it to a person).

If you like canned, sliced pineapple (it makes wonderful harmony with lamb) you might substitute this for the tomato. Drain the slices well, then just saute them delicately brown in a little butter. In place of the lamb chop you might use chicken. Choose broilers, have them quartered before broiling, and serve one quarter to each person. Or, you might make club steak the center attraction of the plate. (This is very tender and entirely without bone). Have it sliced ½ inch thick, and serve a whole slice to each person (slices are not large).

Pie for Dessert.

One of the sturdier pies seems to me the cap-the-climax dessert for this kind of dinner. Say mince or apple pie, made like this: Bring 2 cups of water and 2 cups seedless raisins to slow boil. Then add 2 tablespoons sugar, 1½ teaspoons salt, 2 tablespoons cornstarch first mixed with 4 tablespoons cold water. Stir well and boil about 5 minutes. Remove from fire, stir in grated rind ½ lemon, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 1 cup broken walnut meats. Turn into 9-inch pie plate lined with pastry. Put on top crust and bake in hot oven (450 F.) 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 350 F., and bake till brown (about 10 minutes more).

When I spoke of French fries and baked Idaho potatoes above, I had in mind the recipes in my brand-new, 5-page bulletin, "Potatoes for Every Day and Dress-Up Meals." It's practically the Ten Commandments on how to cook potatoes. Creamed, au gratin, scalloped, Franconia, Anna, stuffed, puffed, Parisienne, twice-baked—and many other ways. Just Folks

By Edgar A. Guest.

I, in this troubled and fretful year,
Am ordered by her to a ball to go,
Rigged up in the garb of a cavalier,
With sword and buckler and plumed chapeau.

King Charles the First on the scaffold died.
And a prayer on his lips to the other side—
The sleeves of his doublet were edged with lace.

Now I must dress as a cavalier,
With lace at sleeves and plumed chapeau,
Sword and buckler and all such gear,
Which were worn by men of the long ago.

And I shall feel like a fool the while,
But I shall know perfectly how and why
The good King Charles was able to smile
As he stood on the scaffold about to die.

Old Meat Stew Recipe Awarded Weekly $5 Prize

Mrs. Marie E. Moran Is Winner on Formula Long in Family.

The $5 weekly prize has been awarded to Mrs. Marie E. Moran, of 2416 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, for an old-fashioned meat stew recipe which has been used in her family for three generations.

Fresh or left-over beef, lamb, veal or pork may be used to make this stew. On a cold, dreary day the family will relish a meat stew for either luncheon or dinner.

The recipe follows:

2½ lbs. meat, cut in small pieces
6 medium sized potatoes, diced
1 bunch (small) celery cut in ½-inch lengths
1 onion
1 large carrot sliced thin
2 bay leaves
2 teaspoons minced parsley
Salt, pepper and thyme to taste

Put meat, carrots, celery, onion and seasoning in a saucepan and cover with water. If raw beef is used, cook slowly 3 hours; other meats, 2½ hours; left-over meat, 1½ hours. Add potatoes one-half hour before stew is done. Take up meat and vegetables and put in a deep dish. Thicken broth with flour, one tablespoon, or enough to make a thick cream. Browned flour gives more flavor. Ten minutes before serving, small dumplings may be added to the gravy. Cook covered; then pour the gravy over meat and vegetables in a dish.

Submit all recipes to be entered in the contest to Food Editor, The Washington Post, Washington, D. C.

How to Keep Well

Dr. W. A. Evans.

A diagram published by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. might be interpreted as predicting that there will be no more deaths from consumption after a date somewhere between 1950 and 1965. That means in the United States, or the registration area thereof—almost the entire country. They base what they say on the improvement in the prevalence of consumption that took place between 1900 and 1933. The consumption death rate was practically 200 in 1900, whereas in 1932 it was 58.8. The prediction for 1933, based on the first ten months' record, was 56. Calculating the expectation as far in the future as 1940, they supply some very hope-inspiring figures. If the same rate of improvement that has prevailed since 1900 continues until 1940 the rate for that year will be only around 24. And, projecting it further into the future, the disease should disappear about 1950.

On the other hand, if the basis of the calculation is the improvement in the last decade only, the rate in 1940 will be about 38, and projecting it still further the disease will disappear about 1965.

A comparison of these two projections into the future indicates that improvement is slowing up which is what should be expected. Wiping out the last remnants of a disease is very difficult and the difficulties increase as the end approaches.

Dr. Frederick L. Hoffman has made a study of the same subject, from which he arrives at about the same conclusions. His study includes a section on consumption in other countries. The improvement is rather world-wide and seven countries, one of which is Canada and another Denmark, are making a better record than the United States.

A consumption rate of 56 is very gratifying, but it is far from satisfying. Our consumption hospitals are still very much overcrowded and thousands are vainly seeking admission to them. Relatively few succeed in getting in during the period when the disease is readily curable. Thousands will be far advanced cases before they can get help from hospitals and sanitariums.

Dr. Hoffman praises a report by Dr. F. C. S. Bradbury on the causes of cosumption. He stresses overcrowding, undernourishment, bad sanitation, poor housing, early marriage, size and composition of family, poverty and infection of houses. To these Dr. Hoffman adds the effects of dust and some of the forms of silicosis.

Dishes That "Alice's" Friends Liked Are Just as Good Today

Anniversary of Her Creator Appropriate Time to Try Them Again.

Just 101 years ago today in England the creator of "Alice in Wonderland" first saw the light of day. When still quite a young professor of mathematics of Oxford, he told to his three little friends all the stories about queens and duchesses, white rabbits and mad hatters and Cheshire cats with curious guns.

This story is brought back to us a little bit more vividly perhaps today because we find laughing Alice stepping through the mirror at the movies or perhaps find some of our most famous present day dramatic actresses reviving the story.

We won't attempt to compete luncheon, but we shall attempt to plan a wonderful dinner that you might like to try.

Remember when the Mock Turtle sang about "Beautiful soup, so rich with the Mad March Hare and his tea party, or argue with the Red Queen or the White Queen over a and green, waiting in a hot tureen?" Why not open dinner then with a green soup—say a cream of spinach in individual marnutes or tureens with a generous dab of whipped cream and a large sprinkling of grated parmesan cheese?

Cream of Spinach Soup.

Brown two tablespoons of finely minced onion in two tablespoons of butter. Add one and one-third cups of canned spinach and two and two-thirds cups of thin white sauce. Heat to boiling. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Beat with a dover beater 1 minute. Serve at once. Six servings.

When Alice traveled through the Looking Glass and was introduced by the Red Queen to the Leg of Mutton, the leg of mutton got up in the dish and made a little bow to Alice, which she returned. Let us, therefore, have at our dinner a leg of lamb prepared in such a manner that we shall have to accept our family's plaudits with bows.

Roast Leg of Lamb.

Do not remove fell from a leg of lamb. Wipe with a damp cloth, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and rub well with flour. Place on a rack with the skin side down and the cut surface up. If the fat covering is very thin, lay strips of bacon across the top. Sear the roast in a hot oven (480 degrees F.) for 30 minutes, or less if bacon has been added. When lightly browned, reduce the temperature to 300 degrees F., and continue cooking without a cover or without the addition of any water. It requires about 35 minutes per pound.

Garnish the roast on the platter with cinnamon pears made by heating canned pears in cinnamon syrup. Garnish with mint leaves. Hominy au gratin and buttered red cabbage complete this course of the dinner.

The salad should be a regular looking glass salad so why not have a gelatin salad of cucumber and pineapple.

Cucumber and Pineapple Salad.

Pare, chop and drain one cup of cucumber; chop and drain one cup of canned sliced pineapple. Mix cucumber and pineapple, and add gelatin, which has been soaked in one-fourth cup of cold water and dissolve in one-fourth cup of boiling water; then add one-fourth cup of sugar, one-fourth cup of mild vinegar, two-thirds cup of pineapple syrup, one tablespoon of lemon juice and a few grains of salt. Mold.

One Reason Why Some CHILDREN DO BETTER IN SCHOOL Than Others

(Something any teacher will tell you . . .)

THE reason some children in school seem dull is because they are actually dull from HUNGER—Not that there isn't plenty to eat, but little appetites are often listless in the morning, and kiddies go off to school half fed—and therefore inattentive and not alert.

King Syrup—the new taste sensation (a delicious blend of fine syrups)—stimulates the appetite, giving unusual appeal to a hearty breakfast of pancakes or waffles. Also—and this is important—King Syrup contains dextrine which gives quick energy and aids in the digestion of other foods. Get King Syrup today and watch the healthy smiles at breakfast tomorrow.
